Whereupon Motion was made and carried that the said surplus of $24,000.00 be transferred to the General Fund and that $24,000.00 be transferred to the School Fund.

IN RE: SUGGESTED SCHOOL BUILDING PLAN.

It appearing to this Board that in order to retire a million dollar bond issue, it will be necessary to raise the present levy of $2.20 to $2.81 and,

That the interest on the proposed bond issue will be $393,750.00 at an interest rate of 3.75% and that if a higher interest rate has to be paid, the above figure will increase proportionately. Therefore, it is the opinion of this Board that it will be more practical to approach the present School Board needs by establishing the following pay as you go plan:

Increase the present $2.20 levy to $3.00, which is only 19¢ more than the required .81¢ levy needed to finance the bond issue.

Levy an automobile license, revenue from which combined with the suggested 81¢ levy be used to construct yearly as many of the needed school buildings as possible.

The Board in establishing the foregoing suggested plan, has taken into consideration the fact that in the event of a changed school program or a drastic change in economic conditions the county levy for taxation could be lowered without affecting the county's obligation. Whereas under a bond program a fixed levy could not be changed under any conditions.

This Board begs to offer the suggestion that the School Board use every means possible in planning school construction to hold costs to a minimum.

IN RE: RESOLUTION REQUESTING THE REPEAL OF SECTION 22-152.

Whereas the counties of the State are having difficulty in carrying on the functions of local government, and,

Whereas the greatest portion of total revenue of the counties is being expended for schools, and

Whereas the school population in Virginia has increased to such an extent that additional class rooms and facilities are needed in all of the counties, and

Whereas this Board is of the opinion that entirely adequate school buildings could be built for much less than they are now being built for, and

Whereas the funds for building schools are raised entirely by local taxes, and

Whereas under present laws the local authorities in effect have no control over the type of building being built or the cost of such building.

Therefore be it resolved that this Board is of the opinion that Section 22-152 of the Code of Virginia, which provides that no school building shall be built without the approval of the Division Superintendent of Schools and the plans and specifications of such building shall be approved by the Superintendent of Public Instruction, should be repealed and that the Superintendent of Public Instruction should be given advisory powers only and that the expenditure of local tax money for the building of schools should be given to the local school boards, and a copy of this resolution be sent to our representatives in the House of Delegates and Senate of Virginia and a copy sent to our Governor and to the Superintendent of Schools and Superintendent of Public Instruction.

IN RE: SALES TAX.

Taking cognizance of the ever increasing cost of the public school system in Virginia, not only in the Building program but in the cost of operation and maintenance, and recognizing that this ever increasing cost is being borne principally by the real estate of Virginia which is now taxed to the point of saturation, as evidenced by the tremendous debt which is now being borne by the localities; and

WHEREAS, The State of Virginia has come up with some Thirty-Five Million Dollars ($35,000,000.00) or more in surplus revenue, a part of same has been proposed to be transferred to the literary fund to be loaned back to the localities at a rate of interest of three per cent (3%) which in itself will put a heavier burden of taxation on the taxpayers of Virginia and will in no way meet the growing demands of the building program, to say nothing about the ever increasing costs of operation and maintenance;

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED: That we do hereby go on record as favoring a general sales tax, not for the purpose of just another tax to add to the already growing burden of taxes which we already have, but for the purpose of relieving the heavy burden of taxation which is now being borne by the real estate owners of the State, and believing that the sales tax is the fairest and most equitable way to finance the public schools' ever increasing costs, we do hereby request the members of the General Assembly to work for the passage of a sales tax bill and recommend that the revenue therefrom be distributed to the counties and cities on an equitable basis.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED: That a copy of this resolution be sent to our representatives in the House of Delegates and Senate of Virginia and a copy sent to our Governor and to the Superintendent of Schools and Superinendent of Public Instruction.

IN RE: ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDURES REGARDING SUBDIVISIONS.

Frank Campodonico, Resident Engineer informed the Board that by resolution adopted by the State Highway Commission October 29, 1959, regarding subdivisions the following proceedure will be followed:

1. It is expected that the developer will submit plats to your office showing:

   a. The complete drainage layout, including all pipe sizes, types, drainage easements and means of transporting the drainage to a well-defined open stream which is considered natural drainage.

   b. A cross section showing the proposed street construction, depth and type of base, type of surface, etc.

   c. A profile or contour map showing the proposed grades for the streets and drainage facilities.

   d. A location map tying the subdivision into our present road system, eigher by aerial photographs or topographic maps of the U. S. Department of Interior.

   e. It is not intended that the subdivider submit to us just a blank map and that we put on the drainage, plan the grades, etc., We, of course, will check these, however, the original work must be done by his engineers who are authorized to do such work in accordance with law.

2. Upon receipt of the plat and plans, the Resident Engineer is to study the layout thoroughly and determine if the plans as set up comply with all requirements of this Department, noting thereon any corrections he feels should be made and;

   a. The drainage features shall be referred to the District Office for review by the person in the District frafting Room trained for drainage work. Should there be a situation on which the District feels it should obtain further advice, the matter should be referred to the Hydraulic Section of the Location and Design Division.

   b. Where a situation appears to be complicated and if there is any doubt in the mind of the Resident Engineer, he is to forward the prints and all location information to the District Office for their approval. If there are still doubts, full information should be forwarded to the Central Office.

   c. After appropriate corrections or changes have been made on the plats and plans by those making the reviews, they will be returned through the District Engineer for his approval to the Resident Engineer.

   d. The resident Engineer will return the corrected and approved plat to the developer, keeping one copy for his files, and shall in his letter of transmittal advise the developer of the corrections made.

3. At the time the subdivision layout is approved by the Department, the Board of Supervisors of the county shall be notified that the subdivision prints have been reviewed, certain recommendations made, and if the subdivision is developed according to these plans, that the streets will be eligible for State maintenance provided;

   a. The developer dedicates the prescribed rights of way.

   b. The Board of Supervisors makes the request by suitable resolution.

   c. The streets render a public service, that is, from a standpoint of occupied dwellings and continuing traffic service to the same. The rendition of a public service shall be deemed to be the street which most directly serves the occupied dwellings within the subdivision. Only such streets as render such service are to be taken in. It is not the intent of the Commission to take in streets providing no service.

   d. The streets have been properly maintained by the developer since completion.

   e. The developer furnishes the Department a bond in sufficient amount to guarantee the satisfactory performance of the streets for a period of one year from the time of acceptance; or, as an alternative, the developer may construct the streets under Highway Department inspection, the cost of said inspection to be borne by him.

f. Since maintenance funds are set up on an annual budget basis, the inclusion of new subdivision streets without additional funds causes budget troubles, whenever a developer wishes streets taken in other than as of July 1, agreements should be worked out providing for the developer to pay the estimated cost of maintenance for the remainder of the fiscal year.

4. Upon request by the Board of Supervisors and if the above providions have been met, the Resident Engineer will forward the requested addition through channels along with all information including his date of approval, etc. This should also include a working plat showing the drainage and other roadway geometrics so that they will become a permanent file in this office in case of later developments.

Commonwealth's Attorney D. Carleton Mayes and Duke

Personable Pointer Participates in County Government

Wolf at Heart

Duke, a Friendly Pointer, Is Courthouse Personality

By Bob Gordon

DINWIDDIE, June 2—There is a saying making the rounds of the Dinwiddie courthouse these days that if Duke doesn't make his morning social call, the day is off to a bad start.

Duke, a gangling black-and-white pointer, the pet of Gus Mayes, Dinwiddie's commonwealth attorney, is a familiar sight at the courthouse. The 15-month-old frolicsome Duke dogs his master's footsteps each day and treks along to many courthouse functions.

At 9 a.m. sharp each day, except when it is raining, Duke—who dislikes water—barks his presence at the side door of the courthouse. Before his morning social calls he promptly makes for his office and sniffs a swift inspection of his rug at the foot of a bookcase of legal documents. Next he greets the bosses' attractive secretary with a nudge of his cold black nose.

Then Duke is on his merry way, trotting down the hallway on his calls. He sticks his head in one office, looks around, nods his greeting and then moves

A wolf at heart, he tarries ju... a bit longer in the offices with the pretty courthouse stenographers.

"He is a lover not a fighter," Attorney Mayes explained.

Duke's courthouse excursions don't stop with the social calls. He attends the monthly meetings of the supervisors with his master and gives everyone in the courtroom a close-look-see before settling down at the foot of the jury box to wait out the session.

"He'd make a good hunting dog with a little training."

Duke has a job ahead of him, Attorney Mayes said. "He will have to break in my new secretary, Miss Barbara Wells, next week."

The courthouse girls really go for Duke. When the commonwealth attorney was recovering from a minor illness recently the girls sent him a basket of fruit and right on top of the bundle was a large can of dog food with a tag "for Duke from the courthouse girls."

Duke is a good conman to boot, Mayes said. He runs over to the jail at mealtime every day and gets the jailer to feed him.

"He was kind of upset," Mayes said Saturday, when the new home demonstration agent was introduced around to everyone but him. However, his hair was smoothed down shortly when Barner Batte, court clerk made the formal introduction."

A good portion of Duke's day is taken up with day dreaming and buzzing the courthouse grounds.

"He points everything from a bumble bee to a bird," Mayes said. When he is not greeting friends or chasing the birds and the bees he sits at his window, chin propped on the sill.

DINWIDDIE, March 29.- Dinwiddie County School Superintendent W. A. Scarborough got a big surprise last night.

Close to 100 persons at the annual banquet meeting of the Dinwiddie Education Association paid tribute to their superintendent of 33 years for outstanding service and presented him with a silver tray.

Paul F. Myers, president of the association, presided at the meeting, held in the cafeteria of Midway High School. Attending were county teachers, principals, other school officials and their guests, as well as three retired teachers, Miss Emmie White, Mrs. Mayo Reames and Miss Mamie Clark.

EDUCATION RENAISSANCE

"When Mr. Scarborough became superintendent of schools on July 1, 1923, it marked the renaissance of education for Dinwiddie County," Ivan Butterworth, principal of Dinwiddie High School, said. He attributed the great progress in county schools largely to Scarborough's leadership.

Fred Young, chairman of the county school board, said that in his close association with the superintendent throughout the years, he was constantly amazed at his efficiency in every phase of managing the public school system. Young formally presented the gift.

W. A. SCARBOROUGH

After expressing his appreciation, Scarborough gave credit for the improvement in the county schools to the teachers, principals, school board members and supervisors. He especially cited Miss Elizabeth Elmoore, for her work as director of education.

U. R. DEAN SPEAKS

Dr. William T. Muse, dean of T. C. Williams School of Law of the University of Richmond, emphasized the importance of being a good citizen. "There is no such thing as vacuum-packed good citizenship," he said.

"We must flavor our communities with good deeds," he said. "Other nations are looking to America for moral leadership, which we can not give unless as individuals we are good citizens."

Entertainment included vocal solos by Mrs. Grace Richardson and Ann Marek, of Midway High School, and Dan Heizer, of the University of Richmond.

Mrs. Joyce Morton, home economics teacher at Midway, was chairman of the banquet committee.

A PROFILE

Money Problems Led Judge To Rule Out Engineering In Favor of Law Profession

By JOE MARSH

J. Garland Jefferson, Jr., is a judge who might have been an engineer.

But, in 1906, when he was considering engineering school, it was a matter of economics. Then, it would have taken him four years for an engineering degree compared iwth two years for a law degree. Jefferson chose law.

"I didn't have money enough to do anything else," the judge said in an interview.

He was graduated from Hampden-Sydney College in 1905, taught school a year at Smithfield, Isle of Wight County, then went to the University of Virginia law school. The judge is descended from an uncle of Thomas Jefferson, the university's founder.

18 YEARS' SERVICE

The tall, angular judge with thinning white hair yesterday ended almost 18 years as judge of Chesterfield County Circuit Court. He will continue as judge in the Fourth Circuit (from Powhatan to Dinwiddie.) His successor in Chesterfield and Colonail Heights, the new Thirty-seventh Circuit is William Old. The two judges have at least one thing in common: bachelorhood.

A retiring person, Jefferson shuns publicity. Because of the occasion yesterday, the judge relaxed a long-standing "no interview" rule.

While a new judge was installed, tributes were paid Judge Jefferson. Those tributes were in the warm handshakes and sincere words of lawyers who have practiced before him in Chesterfield, of former school mates, of police officers, of county and city officials

J. GARLAND JEFFERSON, JR.
"Friendly Dignity"

"Chesterfield is losing him but we still have him in Powhatan," said E. Floyd Yates, of Powhatan, a former delegate from Powhatan and Chesterfield Counties.

'FRIENDLY DIGNITY'

The Chesterfield-Colonial Heights Bar Association also paid tribute with a resolution praising Jefferson's "friendly dignity," his patience and the manner in which he has performed ever-increasing judicial duties in Chesterfield.

Over Amelia way, where the judge lives, there have been John Garland Jeffersons for generations since the first one, the judge's great-grandfather and also a lewyer, migrated from Lunenburg County.

The grandfather, another J. G. J., built "Winterham," the family homeplace, nearly 100 years ago and near Amelia. There, his father, the third J. G. J., and the judge were born. His father, who was manager of the Amelia plant of the Imperial Tobacco Company, died in 1949 at age 91.

MAIN HOBBY

The judge no longer lives at Winterham but operates a dairy farm, his "main hobby," there.

One of Jefferson's forebears, John Y. Mason, born in 1799, was a Federal judge, Secretary of the Navy, Federal Attorney-General and minister to France. Mason was the grandfather of Jefferson's mother, Harriet B. Mason Jefferson.

The judge estimates that removal of Chesterfield from the Fourth Circuit will reduce the circuits's case load by 50 per cent. Since he became judge on April 6, 1938, Jefferson said, the case load of the circuit has more than doubled in cases and in complicated issues.

Jefferson's many jobs have offered variety. He served as the first trial justice for Amelia-Powhatan from 1934 to 1938, served as chairman of the State Milk Commission for one year, as chairman of the Amelia County Democratic Committee for many years. Also, he has been a school board member and the president of two Amelia banks.

One of the judge's most noted characteristics is the way he dangles a cigarette downward from his lips at about a 35-degree angle while chatting and relaxing during court recesses.

COUNTY'S APPRECIATION—Deputy Sheriff Perry Lamkin, 69, who retired after 28 years' service, is thanked by Charles L. Knott, chairman of the Dinwiddie County Board of Supervisors, for his work as a county officer. Watching the brief ceremony yesterday were Supervisor C. H. Zehmer (left) and County Clerk Barner Batte. Lamkin, a native of Charles City County, was a farmer and sawmill operator before becoming a law enforcement officer.

IN RE: RESOLUTION OF APPRECIATION (O. P. LAMPKIN)

WHEREAS O. P. Lampkin retired on April 1, 1956 after years service, we the members of the Board wish to record our appreciation of the wonderful spirit he has shown and his faithfulness and willingness to serve beyond his call of duty as Deputy Sheriff of this County.

In all he did his county and the work of crime prevention and detection seemed to be first in his thinking.

RESOLVED That we express to Mr. Lampkin our high regard and esteem for the public service rendered by him and we express regret at the loss of his services and wish him a happy retirement.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that a copy of this resolution as a tribute to his service be presented to him, a copy recorded in the minutes of this Board and a copy mailed to the Southside Virginia News.

Survey of Dinwiddie Tax Books Turns Up Surprises for Many

By Al Wagner
Times-Dispatch Staff Writer

DINWIDDIE, VA., Sept. 6—The Dinwiddie County Board of Supervisors really started something when it authorized the county clerk to check into the delinquent tax situation.

It's not so much a case of citizens trying to beat the county out of the money they own.

But it is something of a shock for a resident to find out he owes taxes on land he didn't even know was his.

That is just one of the things that has happened since H. B. Batte, county clerk, started a leisurely survey of the county's tax books.

Collected $2,900

The supervisors first gave Batte the go ahead to make the checks a year ago. He went through the books and sent out letters to persons found to be delinquent.

He collected $2,900.

Now the checking operation has gotten a little more complicated. Batte has set up a new bookkeeping system on delinquent tax matters.

In the older books, huge affairs with entries scrawled in ink across a wide expanse of pages, names were listed more or less as they came up and checked off when the money was paid.

A couple of months ago, Batte started something new. Delinquent tax entries are now being listed in a loose leaf book with separate pages devoted to each taxpayer.

This means that delinquent accounts, instead of being listed a number of times through scattered sections of the book as was formerly the case, are now recorded one time only.

Beneath each name is space to list unpaid levies as they become due.

Now, Batte says, he expects to top last year's collection.

There's no rush about the operation. The clerk and his assistants are going through the old books whenever they have some spare time.

It's taken them a couple of months to get through a third of the alphabet. Only a few notifications have been sent to delinquents to date.

—Staff Photo

H. B. Batte, Dinwiddie County Clerk, and Tax Book

Results of His Investigations Are Often Surprising

But the operation has turned up some interesting situations. It has also resulted in some howls from taxpayers.

Consider the plight of the citizen, secure in the knowledge he has paid his taxes, who gets a letter asking about back taxes on land he doesn't know anything about.

A check of land books shows the land is his all right, even if he didn't know it. And he owes taxes on it.

That's happened in the course of going through the books.

There is the man who bought a piece of land from a bank back in 1925. That was the year the bank closed.

He's paid taxes on the property regularly for 19 years. But the law says a buyer assumes responsibility for unpaid taxes at the time of the sale.

And the bank didn't pay taxes on the land in 1931. The owner finds he owes the county money.

That happened, too.

A number of people are finding they owe taxes for the same reason, Batte says. The original owner sells his land, then throws away the tax notice when it comes and forgets about it.

The new owner assumes the tax responsibility, but nobody tells him about the amount due. That is, not until Batte checks through the books and comes up with the information.

But it is not all a story of people being notified they owe taxes.

A lot of the clerk's letters are coming back with an "address unknown" stamp. Batte figures the original owners have died and the heirs have moved away.

Batte hastens to point out, however, that it seldom seems to be a case of person trying to beat the county out of taxes.

It's just that a lot of people don't know they owe the money. The check of the books has cost one taxpayer $200. Others have paid almost as much.

One small [illegible] be noted though. After all years on the books unpaid taxes are not collected.

Dinwiddie Court Clerk Has Records Dated 1830

The Clerk of the Circuit Court of Dinwiddie County is custodian of records that go back to 1830 in part and fully cover the county's legal history from 1870.

H. Barner Batte, of McKenney and present occupant of the position, explains that the county was formed in 1752 from Prince George County, but most records from that date were burned by Yankee troops in 1864-65.

Keeping the docket (or schedule) of Circuit Court, which sits four times a year, and recording a variety of legal transactions constitute the bulk of activity in the Clerk's Office, a building about 15 yards north-east of the Dinwiddie Courthouse.

Batte has been occupied with these records since January, 1952, when he took office. He had won the Democratic primary and the regular election the previous year. Prior to this his experience as a representative of the voters considered of 15-years service on the McKenney Town Council.

His association with McKenney began at birth, in 1909, and has continued uninterrupted since then. He graduated from McKenney High School in 1927 and went into the retail business immediately. His activity also included managing a dairy farm. He and his brother, J. P. Batte Jr., were partners in this and the store.

Batte divided the next 24 years between store and farm and what might have been a career of "keeping store" was not interrupted until his election as clerk.

In the store keeping period he married the former Miss Hazel Poarch, of Stony Creek, a far piece down the road for Batte, who has been anchored to McKenney. He explains that the meeting was occassioned by Miss Poarch being a school teacher in McKenney in 1935. They have two daughters, Cornelia Ann, 18, attending Longwood College, and Mary Bruce, 9.

Batte is a past president of the McKenney Ruritan Club, served on Dinwiddie County Selective Service Board, has served 18 years as steward of Asbury Methodist Church and was treasurer of the Methodist Charge of Rocky Run, Manson and Asbury Churches for 15 years.

Dinwiddie has somewhat less than 20,000 population (18,839 in 1950; hence the clerk, as custodian of all county records, has less business than in some Virginia localities. However, there is enough for Batte and his two deputies to keep busy. Miss Joyce Wells became a deputy in January, 1951, and Mrs. Annie L. Williams in July, 1952.

Miss Wells previously had worked five months part time for Trial Justice B. Hunter Barrow and Mrs. Williams had worked six months for Commissioner of the Revenue, Mrs. Lizzie Watkins Elder. They have found the legal aspects of those jobs helpful in their work as deputies, they say.

The records in the clerk's office cover all legal transactions and the results of court action on many illegal transaction. Whether one wants to determine to the ownership of a parcel of land or the legality of a power of attorney, the clerk's office is the place. It keeps records of: wills, deeds of trust, deeds of sale, divorces and separations, judgments, civil warrants, chattel mortages and tax liens, both federal and state.

The members of the Bar of Dinwiddie County wish to express their profound sorrow at the death of their friend and comrade, Albert M. Orgain, and to place upon record a testimonial to his worth and character. Albert Orgain possessed in a high degree those qualities and characteristics which made him so valuable as a citizen and beloved as a friend. His splendid qualities of mind, unimpeachable character, and unusual ability; his unfailing loyalty to his friends, and devotion to duty: his keen sense of honor; his high moral courage; his frankness and fairness in all his dealings, all combined to commend him to those who came in contact with him, and particularly to those who knew him best.

During his service for more than eighteen years as Clerk of the Circuit Court of Dinwiddie County, and many prior years as Deputy Clerk, these qualities and characteristics manifested themselves at all times as to gain and hold the respect and confidence of the public, high and low alike. To theCourt he was an always present help; to the lawyers his courteous and efficient services were of value beyond measure, and to the people of his country, loved by him, and beloved in return, he was a sympathetic friend and adviser. He was always found with those striving for the best interests of his community and the state.

Be it, therefore, resolved, that the foregoing be presented to the Circuit Court of Dinwiddie County with the request that it be spread upon the records of the Court; and that a copy be sent to the family.

MORE THAN 100 ELECTIONS

Dinwiddie Farmer's Record

By Robert Gordon
Times-Dispatch News Bureau

DINWIDDIE, Nov. 10—Berrimond Thomas Scott has had a hand in more than 100 elections, during the past 60 years. But, he admitted Monday, "I never really took much stock in politics."

Since 1898 when James H. Tyler won the Virginia gubernatorial race, Scott has served as registrar, election judge or clerk of the Monk's Neck precinct in central Dinwiddie county. There are approximately 70 registered voters at this country voting place.

Farmer Scott, now 82, followed his father, Thomas B. Scott, as registrar of the precinct. Until last year, each of the county's 14 precincts had their own registrar. Now the county courthouse is the central registration point for Dinwiddie voters.

With his son, Thomas B. Scott, he works their 200-acre farm on state Rt. 605. He frowns on being called old and said "you're as old as you feel." He named his son Thomas B. rather than Junior simply "because they'd call me Old Scott if I didn't."

While shucking a bin of corn and between man-to-man talks with Teddy, his 3-year-old grandson, Scott recalled his six decades of election work.

Father Was Registrar

Before the registration books were transfered to the courthouse, he said, "They were in the house as long as I could remember." His father also was registrar for decades.

Election day of old is a thing of the past, he said. "It used to be a friend meet friend type of affair. One farmer with his family would stop and chat with his neighbors, cast his ballot and the day would generally be a congenial one."

"Today, it's zip, zip and it's all over," Scott said.

In the old days, he added "voters walked to the polls. They didn't bother hitching up the horses. Now people just climb into their car and drive to the polls."

Scott has seen his election day salary jump from a $1 a day in 1898 to $10 for last Tuesday's election.

"I was raised up in it and as long as someone is needed I guess I'll be their man," he said. "I never have made an attempt to get out -and only missed one election" at harvest time when the farm needed him more than the polls.

New Copying Machine Greatly Aids Work of Dinwiddie County Offices

DINWIDDIE — A new, modern copying machine makes it easier, quicker, and cheaper to keep Dinwiddie County's records up-to-date.

In only a few seconds this machine can reproduce an exact copy of any information on paper — printed matter, handwritten documents, maps, pictures — just about everything.

The machine was recently installed here in the Clerk's Office and is used by all branches of the county government.

Personnel of the Clerk's Office use it to make copies of all requested records that can be run thru the machine. The treasurer's office uses it to make special forms and some collection letters.

But it is especially valuable to R. W. Bridgman, Commissioner of the Revenue, and his deputy, Sue O. Hargrave. They are probably the most frequent users of the machine. And with good reason!

Works This Way

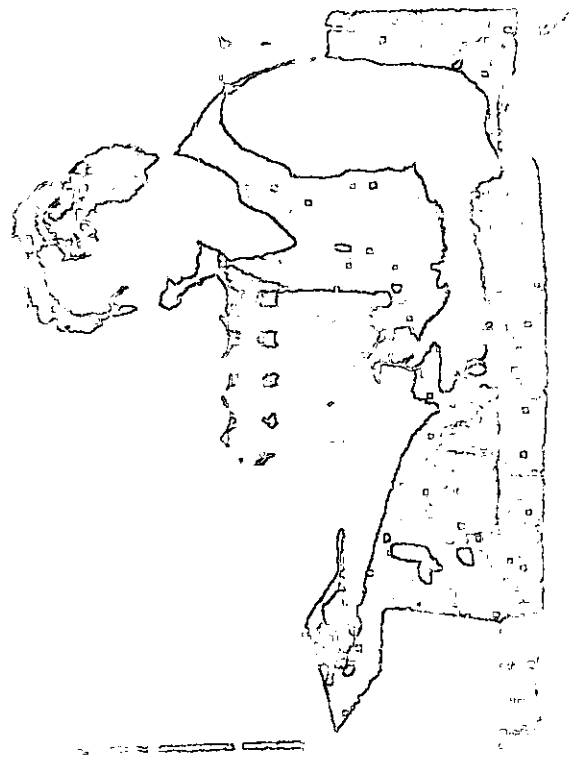
On it they make copies of all plats (maps or charts) recorded with deeds in the Clerk's Office. (All deeds, wills, court orders, plats, etc., are recorded by microfilming them, having the film developed, then copies made and filed in the proper books, for use by the public.)

When examining the commissioner's records recently, Fred Forberg, director of appraisal and mapping for the State Department of Taxation, said, "I want to congratulate the commissioner on having his plats up-to-date."

A quicker, more accurate reproduction of the plats can be obtained thru use of the machine. Before it was necessary to make the copies by tracing with a pencil or pen. Now copies of the most detailed plats are made from the microfilm in a few seconds.

And, as one official put it, "The foresight of the county Board of Supervisors in purchasing modern office machines holds down the cost of county government in Dinwiddie."

QUICK COPY—Mrs. Sue O. Hargrave inserts a plate (map) of a parcel of land and a blank sheet of paper thru the copying machine and presto!! In a few seconds she has a copy to file in the Commissioner of Revenue's Office. (Staff Photo)



It's Among Dinwiddie County's Forgotten Organizations

History Of J.E.B. Stuart Camp,

By IVAN BUTTERWORTH

Chairman, Dinwiddie County
Civil War Centennial Commission

Among the organizations in Dinwiddie County that have been long forgotten was the J. E. B. Stuart Camp of Confederate Veterans, No. 1. Recently an old folder of papers was found in the Dinwiddie County Clerk's Office that contained scattered and interesting information about this Camp for the interval 1890-1901-5. No doubt A. M. Orgain Sr., former clerk of the county and an officer in the Camp, was responsible for these records being saved. In the old folder in which the records were found, the year 1885 was written thereon and marked through with "Indictments" listed along with the notation, "Puryear Papers." This old folder no doubt once contained the Court papers of the Puryear uxoricide around 1885 and for which Puryear was hanged. This murder was one of the most widely known in Dinwiddie County with the possible exception of the Epes-Muir murder in 1846 and trial in 1848.

Evidently, from the records found, the J. E. B. Stuart Camp was formed about 1889. The last minutes covered a meeting on September 16, 1901 with a list of paid members to October 16, 1905. Also, $20 and $1 Confederate notes as well as a ledger, letters, and other papers about the Camp were located. The Camp was formed for old soldiers and sailors of the Confederacy.

Undoubtedly the Camp was named for Gen. J. E. B. Stuart because one of Dinwiddie County's best known military units of the Civil War, the "Dinwiddie Cavalry," served under Stuart until his mortal wounding at Yellow Tavern in 1864 as Co. I—Third Regiment Volunteers, Virginia Cavalry, Army of Northern Virginia. This unit was in the surrender at Appomattox. To express its appreciation of some of the excellent officers it had served under along with Stuart, and after his death, the Dinwiddie Camp made Generals Fitzhugh and W. H. F. (Rooney) Lee honorary members. In the minutes of the Camp's meeting held on July 21, 1890, communications from both of the Lees were received thanking the organization for their election and both accepted the memberships.

Records Not Found

The original records of the old Confederate Veteran Camps could not be located. No one contacted seemed to know where these old records are or what happened to them. Evidently they were destroyed since no one in the Camps thought the records would ever be of historical value. All charters and charter member lists of the various Camps in many areas have been misplaced since there are no more UCV Camps as such. The Virginia Historical Society, the Virginia State Library and Archieves, U.D.C. Headquarters, and representatives of the Sons of Confederate Veterans were unable to be of assistance to the author about the Dinwiddie Camp.

The first heading found in the minute book of the J. E. B. Stuart Camp showed the following 69 members with the original officers of the Camp. On the second page of the minutes slight changes were observed in some of the officers listed in the roster as compared to the first page. However below, these names will be listed opposite each other where differences occurred. It will be of special interest to Dinwiddians to notice the old post-offices in the County where the early officers of the Camp lived. Many of these post offices have since been abandoned.

Camp No. 14-C. V., Reams Station, Va." Whether the handwriting presenting the manual to the Camp was Mrs. Stuart's is not known. However, there is a strong possibility of this. The manual could have been used by Gen. Stuart while a cadet at West Point where he graduated in 1854. Or, he could have owned it while a captain in the U. S. Army before 1861 when he resigned his commission to join the Confederacy and continued to use it in the Southern forces until his death in 1864. Gen. Stuart, in passing, was born in Patrick County, Va., in 1833, and was best known by the contraction of the three initials in his name to "JEB" that stood for James Ewell Brown — which names were seldom seen.

Given By Last Member

From a note written and posted in the back of this manual, it was given by the last surviving member of the J.E.B. Stuart Camp to the late Ambler B. Moncure, son of the Camp's first commander and father of Mrs. Spiers. This explains how it is now in her possession. She values the relic highly.

The history of the J.E.B. Stuart Camp No. 1 was not one of outstanding achievements. Probably the aging of the veterans was responsible. Their Camp meetings were held at first once a month at the Court House, then every "Court Day" (three months), and later — yearly, until the camp dissolved or ceased to exist. Initiation fees for membership and dues varied. These were found listed — $1; 50 cents, and 25 cents during the life of the Camp. The by-laws were supposedly to have been modeled after those of the R. E. Lee Camp in Richmond, but were finally completed and based on those of the A. P. Hill Camp of Petersburg. Pamphlets of both of these Camps were found among the J. E. B. Stuart Camp's papers.

During its existence the Camp received several [illegible] of historical interest [illegible] men[illegible] attended [illegible] In the minutes [illegible] by [illegible] was used by Camp [illegible] Camp C V [illegible] Camp [illegible]

County to do with it whether they were members or not. A the same meeting, an invita tion was received from the A. P Hill Camp of Petersburg to a tend the unveiling of a confe erate monument in Blandfor Cemetery on June 9, 1890 th was accepted. From the Inde Appeal of the 12th, it was r corded that they marched in t big parade on that date in fr of the Richmond Blues. The P tersburgers were invited a took an important part the ceremonies 19 years la when the Dinwiddie County C federate monument was d cated at the Court House.

The J. E. B Stuart Camp attended the Confederate Re tion in Richmond on June 30, 1896. Ribbons were ordered from J. C. Miller, 316 Cary St., Richmond, Va., for the occasion that cost $3.95 for the lot. Four of these were found in the papers located — one of which was photographed for this article. Thirty of these were distributed by the Adjutant A. T. Powell on the 8 a. m. train from Petersburg to the Camp's representatives when they went in a body to the Richmond Reunion.

Brunswick Commander Welcomed

At the Camp's meeting on June 15, 1895, Col. F. F. Jones, Commander of the Brunswick Camp, was invited to a seat in the meeting and his presence welcomed. Mention was also made in the minutes where outstanding Petersburgers spoke before the Camp. On July Court Day in 1897, a large crowd was in attendance in the court room at Dinwiddie when Hon. F. R. Lassiter, Congressman, delivered an appropriate oration which was loudly applauded. On August 11, 1900, General Stith Bolling, State Commander — C. V., was present and made an address as did also Col. James Mann. Bolling had served as a sergeant in Troop G of the 9th Regiment during the War. His title of General was ex-officio as State Commander of the C. V. organization. C. E. Abernathy was commander of the J. E. B. Stuart Camp then and A. M. Orgain, Adjutant. Abernathy was [illegible] elected in the meeting of [illegible] ember 8th, 1900 to represent the Camp at the Grand Camp's meeting in Staunton, Va., with E. L. Perkins being chosen as alternate. The Adjutant was authorized to pay Abernathy's expenses which evidently were $3.92 as seen from a record in the records dated October 6, 1900. This was quite a contrast to today's inflationary trends! Abernathy was later one of the two Commissioners of Revenue then in the County. He has many descendants still living in Dinwiddie.

In the Camp's meeting on June 15, 1901, it decided to join the Grand Camp — C. V. Department of Virginia. In the same meeting it was ordered, "That the members of the Camp bring a dinner to the quarterly meetings and turn it over to the Quartermaster and that he furnish other refreshments as he may see fit. Too that the Q. M. select two assistants."

If the refreshments refer to what was thought, since many remember some of the Confederate veteran gatherings, veterans' parties were sometimes no places for a Bishop Gorman! The old veterans were faithful to their gatherings and reunions —a strong spirit of comradeship usually was in evidence.

Gen. J. B. Gordon was the General Commanding the UCV in 1894-5 with headquarters in New Orleans. This Georgian is well remembered in Petersburg for his leadership in the unsuccessful assault on Ft. Steadman in 1865 before that city—Lee's last offensive move of the War. An address by Gen. Gordon at the UCV Convention in Atlanta on September 9, 1900 was also found in the Dinwiddie papers of the J. E. B. Stuart Camp. Pamphlets and letters from officers of the General Headquarters and from local Camps in Virginia were also of interest. The 1899 roster of 105 members in the A. P. Hill Camp No. 6 of Petersburg was found and it was noted that Dave Pasthal was an honorary member of that Camp for the year. The A. P. Hill Camp rolls before and after the J. E. B. Stuart Camp contained a scattering of Dinwiddians as members. The A. P. Hill Camp of the Sons of Confederate Veterans contain-tion by-laws, and roster of officers and members were found that were dated March 14, 1894 with Alexander Hamilton as its commander. The pamphlet had been published by Fenn & Owen printers and binders in the Cockade City.

Monument Erected

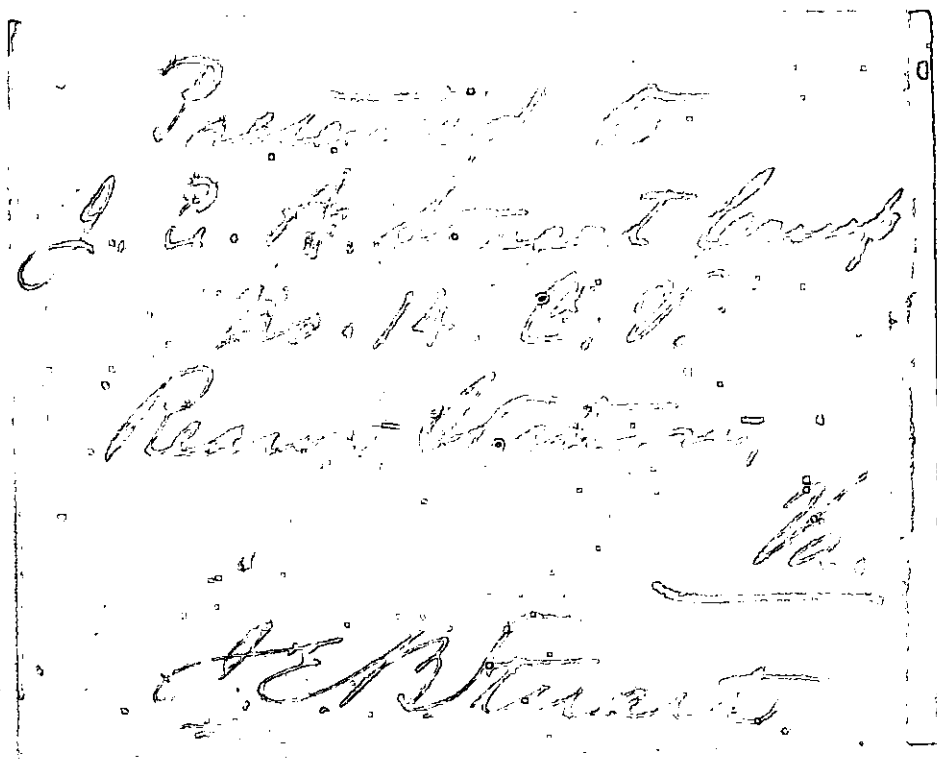
The most important undertaking of the J. E. B. Stuart Camp No. 1, but without complete success, was towards the erection of a Confederate monument at Dinwiddie Court House. This incomplete project was later undertaken by the Dinwiddie Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy and was carried to completion with the aid of the Dinwiddie County Board of Supervisors. The dedication of this monument took place 50 years ago on November 27, 1909. Information was recently received by the author from Mrs. Dewey R. Wood, President-Virginia Division UDC of Front Royal, Va., to the effect she had located in that organization's minutes where the Dinwiddie Chapter of the UDC was organized on October 19, 1909. Its number was 61 in the Virginia Division and number 413 in the General Organization. Its charter, unfortunately, could not be located in the UDC Headquarters in Richmond as well as a list of its total membership.

In the August 1959 article on the dedication of the Dinwiddie monument, it was listed from an accepted local leader of the Dinwiddie UDC that Lt. Col. William M. Feild held the highest rank of any Dinwiddian in the Confederacy. This should have been qualified by, "who remained in the county after the war." Of course, he lived through the rigors of Reconstruction. Roger A. Pryor, a native of the county, held the commission of colonel, an appointment by Gov. Letcher, and a promotion within two weeks to brigadier-general by Gen. Joseph E. Johnston. Pryor, however, resigned his commission to reenlist as a private and was later captured as a courier around Petersburg in 1864. He left this area in 1868 and went to New York and enjoyed an excellent judicial career. However, his relative, William B. McIlwaine, had an important part in the dedication ceremonies.

In the minutes of the J. E. B. Stuart Chapter dated January Court 1897 was found that the organization "appointed Committee to report design for a monument to the Confederate soldiers of Dinwiddie County, Virginia." At the meeting held on February 15, 1897 this was listed, "Camp met—Report of Committee on Monument adopted. Ordered that a Committee of six gentlemen and six ladies for each voting precinct in Dinwiddie County be appointed to solicit contributions for the monument." It was also written, "Ordered that a Committee of one member of this Camp for each voting precinct be selected to appoint the Committee of six ladies and six gentlemen and the Adjutant was requested to notify him of his selection and its purposes. The following shall constitute the Committee — For—Court House —A. M. Orgain; Reams—Dr. E. W. Perkins; Rocky Run—L. L. Meredith; Monck's Neck —M. A. Moncure; Malones—Peter Solo; Brookland (McKenney)—C. E. Abernathy; Cherry Hill—J. A. Gibbs; Richieville—J. W. Bain; New Hope—J. C. Smith; Sutherland—A. A. Hardy; Church Road—F. O. Robertson; White Oak—W. T. Fisher; Darvills—V. O. Wynn; Westboro—G. W. McKenney; and Oak Grove—T. F. Rives."

At the Camp's meeting on March 15, 1897, it was stated that "reports from Precinct Committeemen to appoint six Ladies and six Gentlemen to solicit subscriptions and contributions to the Confederate Monument were received from ten." In addition the Camp decided to use a "contribution paper" to help secure funds upon which was written;

"Whereas it has been determined to erect at Dinwiddie Court House a suitable monument to perpetuate the memory of the soldiers of the County who left their homes and all for the Dangers of Battle and Hardships of Camp in defense of our homes and property and cause. Therefore, we, whose names are hereto subscribed give the amounts opposite our names for said purpose"



INSCRIPTIONS INSIDE CAVALRY MANUAL belonging to Gen. J. E. B. Stuart that was given the J. E. B. Stuart Camp-C. V. by his wid- Flora Cooke Stuart. She undoubtedly wrote the presentation to the Camp above the General's original signature. From the "Virginia Cavalcade" - Winter, 1958, — "it could have been possible that the manual on 'Cavalry Tactics' was written by Stuart's father-in-law, Gen. Philip St. George Cooke, who remained with the North, and given by him to Stuart. His father-in-law was a great admirer of Stuart when his daughter married him in 1855, but they fell out when Cooke did not join the Confederacy. Stuart's ride around McClellan before Richmond in 1862 greatly embarrassed his father-in-law, who was in charge of the North's cavalry there. The North lost confidence in Cooke as a result and he never was given a command afterwards in a battle of the war. Cooke wrote two works on 'Cavalry Tactics' in 1862 that were used by the North. This manual without his known authorship but with the same title, written in 1841, could easily have been composed by Cooke, who was already a captain in the U. S. Cavalry at 31 then."

Accept Printing Offer

The Camp further resolved—"That we accept the kind offer of Hon. W. R. McKenney to have printed for us 250 sheets with above heading, and the Adjutant of this Camp is instructed to distribute the necessary number to each Precinct Committeeman who shall be and remain Chairman of his precinct as to the fund and purpose. On motion, Comrade A. M. Orgain was elected Treasurer of the Monument Fund." The Camp evidently became very interested in the project since at the March 15, 1897 meeting it, "Ordered, That the Camp meet in special session each Court Day until further notice.

Hon. W. R. McKenney was a prominent Petersburg capitalist, lawyer, and businessman who successfully speculated widely in Dinwiddie County land, timber, and property during that period. The present town in southwestern Dinwiddie County was named for him as well as the library in Petersburg.

The Camp on June 18, 1897 ordered, "That the Adjutant send half dozen or more subscription lists of the monument fund to the following parties, and request them to try and get subscriptions—viz—Hunter Barrow, Meridian; J. M. Davis, Westboro; T. B. Booth, Sutherland; W. T. Fisher, Hebron; A. B. Bragg, Darvills; and A. A. Hardy, Sutherland."

The Adjutant was also, "Ordered that these proceedings be published in a "news letter" in the Index-Appeal inviting the general public and all who favor commemorating the memories of Confederate soldiers to meet at Dinwiddie Court House on July Court Day to more effectually organize and devise means to accomplish this purpose and to purchase such number of copies of papers for distribution as he may deem expedient". However, at the July meeting, A. T. Powell, Adjutant, reported, "he could not make satisfactory arrangements with the publishers of the Index-Appeal for the purchase of copies of papers containing the 'news letter' and consequently did not purchase any." As seen in the article in the Index-Appeal of June 20, 1897, it stated—" the monument was. . to commemorate the services of ex-Confederate soldiers whose prowess and endurance enlightened Christendom"

The list of Precinct Committees is published below that were established to raise funds for the monument. These should prove of much interest to their present descendants in the County. Many of these appointed were grandparents, great aunts and uncles of a host of present Dinwiddians whose relatives were active and prominent in County affairs 65-70 years ago. Unfortunately the lists of the following precincts were not found: Rocky Run, Sutherland, Church Road, White Oak, Darvills, and Westboro. The following nine were:

Benefit Programs Staged

In addition to the efforts expended by the Camp towards the Monument Fund as well as the various people in the precincts, references were found of entertainments of various kinds being given and the monies derived were turned over to the Treasurer of the Fund and the Adjutant. Among those listed were "March 8, 1899—Mrs. W. M. Sterne of Dinwiddie C. H. paid $27 23 proceeds from a lecture given for raising funds for the monument." On February 2, 1899 exactly a month earlier, another entertainment had been given at Dinwiddie C. H. and $21 37 received by the Adjutant, A. T. Powell who turned the sum over to A. M. Orgain Treasurer. On April 11, 1899, $34 25 proceeds from another entertainment held at the Court House were given the Monument Fund.

Undoubtedly the above proceeds and other funds raised by the Camp and its organization were given the local UDC Chapter when it accepted the monument project to help it raise its half of the monument's cost. $1,000 of the $2,000 needed since the Board of Supervisors gave the other half as was told earlier in its minutes and as recorded in the article in the local papers dated August 21, 1909.

The Camp must have regretted very much its inability to complete its most important undertaking after the effort it had made to erect the Confederate monument on the Court House grounds. Probably the failure was due to several reasons: the Camp and its members, communication and transportation in those days were limited to the County and hampered united action, the age of the veterans, probably too much "power" organization, and a lack of a vigorous centralized campaign leadership. However, the Camp's wives and daughters carried on to insure that the Dinwiddie veterans' efforts were not given in vain and their sacrifices in the Civil War would not pass unremembered.

It was a pleasure to learn the names of those people associated with the J. E. B. Stuart Camp No. 1 and its activities. Especially were the names and locations of the old and present postoffices in Dinwiddie County found to be most intriguing. Approximately 44 were located. However, the main purpose of this article was to attempt the further stimulation of the many descendants now living in Dinwiddie County of those members of the J. E. B. Stuart Camp No. 1 as well as those whose relatives served in the Camp's monument effort, to the approaching Civil War Centennial 1961-6, in the County. Their interest, cooperation, and effort must be awakened and given to insure its success. Let all loyal Dinwiddians unite in this effort to memorialize those who gave so much to the tragedy of 1861-5 through their Herculean deeds against overwhelming odds and difficulties!

Especially were the results of the Civil War most devastating to the Old Dominion. In addition to the loss of so many of the "flower of her manhood" in battle, she suffered more than any other Confederate state in that her terrain and property were greatly mutilated during the four years the State was the scene of so much military action. Also, Virginia was the only state of the Confederacy to lose territory—the entire State of West Virginia with her vast natural resources. A total of 24,270 square miles of the 63,707 that composed Virginia at the outbreak of the war, or 38 per cent of her area, was severed.

The date, November 27, 1959, the fiftieth anniversary of the unveiling of the Confederate monument at Dinwiddie on November 27, 1909, was chosen by the Dinwiddie Civil War Centennial Committee as a time appropriate for the above appeal and its release.

This Elegant Structure Rules A Proud Old Virginia County . . .

Can You Name It?

STORES, banks and churches cluster about the picturesque court green of this dominating and stately edifice. Back of the four Grecian columns of the portico is a graceful iron balcony, supposedly for the use of political orators and others. Nearby is a tall granite monument to the soldiers of the county who fought for the confederacy.

The county itself was named in honor of a prominent Virginia governor, who held office in the name of the King, during 1751-58. The county's history dates back to the day in May 1607, when the Jamestown colonists arrived at the falls of the Appomattox.

During the Civil War, the forces of General Fitzhugh Lee and General George E. Pickett repelled, for a short time, the Federal troops of General Sheridan, bent on taking Petersburg. The Confederates camped close by the courthouse for the night.

Across from the courthouse is the building that was the famous Winfield Scott's Law Office.

The county? Dinwiddie — named after Robert Dinwiddie, a one-time Governor of Virginia. The picture is that of its noble courthouse.

THE INVESTMENT OF PETERSBURG

The cause was lost, but the end was not yet. The noble Army of Northern Virginia, once, twice conqueror of empire, must bite the dust before its formidable adversary.—Lieutenant-General James Longstreet, C.S.A., in "From Manassas to Appomattox."

THE disastrous failure of the Union army on the sanguinary battlefield of Cold Harbor, in June, 1864, destroyed Grant's last chance to turn the Confederate right flank north of Richmond. He could still try to turn Lee's left and invest Richmond from the north, but this would not have interfered with the lines of supply over the James River and the railroads from the South and West. The city could have resisted for an indefinite time. If Richmond were to fall, it must be besieged from the south.

The movement from Cold Harbor began after dark on June 12th, and Meade's whole army was safely over the James River at Wilcox's Landing by midnight on the 16th of June. The little city of Petersburg is situated twenty-one miles south of Richmond on the southern bank of the Appomattox, a small stream threading its way through the Virginia tidewater belt, almost parallel with the James, into which it flows. In itself the town was of little value to either army. But it was the doorway to Richmond from the south. Three railroads from Southern points converged here. To reach the Confederate capital, Petersburg must first be battered down. At this time the town ought not to have been difficult to capture, for its defenses were but weak entrenchments, and they were not formidably manned. General Smith, who reached Bermuda Hundred by water, with his corps, on the night of the 14th, was ordered by Butler, under instructions from Grant, to move on Petersburg at daylight.

THE DIGGERS AT PETERSBURG—1864

There was not a day during the whole of the nine months' siege of Petersburg that pick and shovel were idle. At first every man had to turn to and become for the nonce a laborer in the ditches. But in an army of one hundred and ten thousand men, in the maintenance of camp discipline, there were always soldier delinquents who for some infringement of military rules or some neglected duty were sentenced to extra work under the watchful eye of an officer and an armed sentry. Generally, these small punishments meant six to eight hours' digging, and here we see a group of Federal soldiers thus employed. They are well within the outer chain of forts, near where the military road joins the Weldon & Petersburg Railroad. The presence of the camera man has given them a moment's relaxation.

The Investment of Petersburg

The Confederate forces at Petersburg were now commanded by General Beauregard. He had conjectured what Grant's plans might be, and in order to prevent the capture of the town and enable him to hold Butler at Bermuda Hundred, he called on Lee for immediate reenforcement. But the latter, not yet convinced that Grant was not moving on Richmond, sent only Hoke's division. On the day after Meade began to move his army toward the James, Lee left the entrenchments at Cold Harbor. Keeping to the right and rear of the Union lines of march, by the morning of the 16th, he had thrown a part of his force to the south side of the James, and, by the evening of the 18th, the last of the regiments had united with those of Beauregard, and the two great opposing armies were once more confronting each other—this time for a final settlement of the issue at arms. The Union army outnumbered that of the Confederates, approximately, two to one.

The contest for Petersburg had already begun. For two days the rapidly gathering armies had been combating with each other. On June 15th, General Smith pushed his way toward the weakly entrenched lines of the city. General Beauregard moved his men to an advanced line of rifle-pits. Here the initial skirmish occurred. The Confederates were driven to the entrenched works of Petersburg, and not until evening was a determined attack made upon them. At this time Hancock, "The Superb," came on the field. Night was falling but a bright moon was shining, and the Confederate redoubts, manned by a little over two thousand men, might have been carried by the Federals. But Hancock, waiving rank, yielded to Smith in command. No further attacks were made and a golden opportunity for the Federals was lost.

By the next morning the Confederate trenches were beginning to fill with Hoke's troops. The Federal attack was not made until afternoon, when the fighting was severe for three hours, and some brigades of the Ninth Corps assisted the Second and Eighteenth. The Confederates were driven back

MAHONE, "THE HERO OF THE CRATER"

General William Mahone, C. S. A. It was through the promptness and valor of General Mahone that the Southerners, on July 30, 1864, were enabled to turn back upon the Federals the disaster threatened by the hidden mine. On the morning of the explosion there were but eighteen thousand Confederates left to hold the ten miles of lines about Petersburg. Everything seemed to favor Grant's plans for the crushing of this force. Immediately after the mine was sprung, a terrific cannonade was opened from one hundred and fifty guns and mortars to drive back the Confederates from the breach, while fifty thousand Federals stood ready to charge upon the panic-stricken foe. But the foe was not panic-stricken long. Colonel McMaster, of the Seventeenth South Carolina, gathered the remnants of General Elliott's brigade and held back the Federals massing at the Crater until General Mahone arrived at the head of three brigades. At once he prepared to attack the Federals, who at that moment were advancing to the left of the Crater. Mahone ordered a counter-charge. In his inspiring presence it swept with such vigor that the Federals were driven back and dared not risk another assault. At the Crater, Lee had what Grant lacked—a man able to direct the entire engagement.

some distance and made several unsuccessful attempts during the night to recover their lost ground. Before the next noon, June 17th, the battle was begun once more. Soon there were charges and countercharges along the whole battle-front. Neither side yielded. The gray and blue lines surged back and forth through all the afternoon. The dusk of the evening was coming on and there was no prospect of a cessation of the conflict. The Union troops were pressing strongly against the Confederates. There was a terrible onslaught, which neither powder nor lead could resist. A courier, dashing across the field, announced to Beauregard the rout of his army. Soon the panic-stricken Confederate soldiers were swarming in retreat, The day seemed to be irreparably lost. Then, suddenly in the dim twilight, a dark column was seen emerging from the wooded ravines to the rear, and General Gracie, with his brigade of twelve hundred gallant Alabamians, plunged through the smoke, leapt into the works, and drove out the Federals. Now the battle broke out afresh, and with unabated fury continued until after midnight.

Early on the morning of the 18th, a general assault was ordered upon the whole Confederate front. The skirmishers moved forward but found the works, where, on the preceding day, such desperate fighting had occurred, deserted. During the night, Beauregard had successfully made a retrograde movement. He had found the old line too long for the number of his men and had selected a shorter one, from five hundred to one thousand yards to the rear, that was to remain the Confederate wall of the city during the siege. But there were no entrenchments here and the weary battle-worn soldiers at once set to work to dig them, for the probable renewal of the contest. In the darkness and through the early morning hours, the men did with whatever they could find as tools—some with their bayonets, or split canteens, while others used their hands. This was the beginning of those massive works that defied the army of Grant before Petersburg for nearly a year. By noon

WHAT EIGHT THOUSAND POUNDS OF POWDER DID

The Crater, torn by the mine within Elliott's Salient. At dawn of July 30, 1864, the fifty thousand Federal troops waiting to make a charge saw a great mass of earth hurled skyward like a water-spout. As it spread out into an immense cloud, scattering guns, carriages, timbers, and what were once human beings, the front ranks broke in panic; it looked as if the mass were descending upon their own heads. The men were quickly rallied; across the narrow plain they charged, through the awful breach, and up the heights beyond to gain Cemetery Ridge. But there were brave fighters on the other side still left, and delay among the Federals enabled the Confederates to rally and re-form in time to drive the Federals back down the steep sides of the Crater. There, as they struggled amidst the horrible débris, one disaster after another fell upon them. Huddled together, the mass of men was cut to pieces by the canister poured upon them from well-planted Confederate batteries. At last, as a forlorn hope, the colored troops were sent forward; and they, too, were hurled back into the Crater and piled upon their white comrades.

of that day they had assumed quite a defensive character. Again the Federals attempted to break the Confederate line. All during the afternoon, regiments were hurled against the newly made works. Artillery bombarded here and there with but little effect. At times the attacking force would come within thirty yards of the entrenchments, only to recoil. Night came, and in front of the trenches the ranks of the Union dead lay thickly strewn.

During these four days, divisions and batteries were being added to both armies, and when the Union assault was successfully repulsed in the twilight hours of June 18, 1864, those two grim adversaries, Grant and Lee, stood in full battle array—this time for the final combat. The siege of Petersburg began the next day.

It was a beautiful June Sabbath. There was only the occasional boom of some great gun as it thundered along the Appomattox, or the fretful fire of picket musketry, to break the stillness. But it was not a day of rest. With might and main the two armies busily plied with pick and spade and axe.

In an incredibly short time, as if by magic, impregnable bastioned works began to loom about Petersburg. More than thirty miles of frowning redoubts, connected with extended breastworks, strengthened by mortar batteries and field-works of every description, lined the fields near the Appomattox. In front were abatis—bushy entanglements and timber slashings. Bomb-proofs and parapets completed these cordons of offense and defense—the one constructed to keep the Federals out; the other to keep the Confederates in. So formidable were the works, that only twice during the siege was there any serious attempt made by either army upon the entrenchments of the other, and both assaults were failures.

It was Grant's purpose to extend his lines to the south and west, until they would finally envelop Lee's right flank, and then strike at the railroads, upon which the Confederate army and Richmond depended for supplies. On June 21st, two corps,

COLORED TROOPS AFTER THE DISASTER OF THE MINE

On July 30, 1864, at the exploding of the hidden mine under Elliott's salient, the strong Confederate fortification opposite, the Confederates working in the fortification above them, trying The plan of the mine was conceived by Colonel Henry Pleasants and approved by Burnside, whose Ninth Corps, in the assaults of June 17th and 18th, had pushed their advance position to within 130 yards of the Confederate works. Pleasants had been a mining engineer and his regiment, the Forty-eighth Pennsylvania, was composed mainly of miners from the coal regions. The work was begun on June 25th and prosecuted under the greatest difficulties. In less than a month Pleasants had the main gallery, 510.8 feet long, the left lateral gallery, 37 feet long, and the right lateral gallery, 38 feet long, all completed. While finishing the last gallery, the right one, the men could hear the to locate the mine, of which they had got wind. It was General Burnside's plan that General Edward Ferrero's division of colored troops should lead the charge when the mine should be sprung. The black men were kept constantly on drill and it was thought, as they had not seen any very active service, that they were in better condition to lead the attack than any of the white troops. In the upper picture are some of the colored troops drilling and idling in camp after the battle of the Crater, in which about three hundred of their comrades were lost. The lower picture shows the entrenchments at Fort Morton, whence they sallied forth.

the Second and Sixth, moved out of their entrenchments to capture the Weldon Railroad, and to extend the line of investment. The region to be traversed was one characteristic of the tidewater belt—dense forests and swampy lowlands, cut by many small creeks. The morning of June 22d found the two army corps in the midst of tangled wilderness. There was some delay in bringing these divisions together—thus leaving a wide gap. While the troops were waiting here, two divisions of A. P. Hill's corps were advancing against them. Hill led Mahone's division through a ravine close by. Screened by the intervening ridge, the Confederates quickly formed in line of battle, dashed through the pine forest, with a fierce, wild yell, and swiftly and suddenly burst through the gap between the two Federal corps, attacking the flank and rear of Barlow's division. A withering volley of musketry, before which the Northerners could not stand, plowed through their ranks. The Federal line was doubled upon itself. The terrific onslaught was continued by the Confederates and resulted in forging to the entrenchments and capturing seventeen hundred prisoners, four guns, and several colors. At dusk Hill returned to his entrenchments. The Second and Sixth corps were joined in a new position.

At the same time the cavalry, under General James H. Wilson, including Kautz's division, started out to destroy the railroads. The Confederate cavalry leader, General W. H. F. Lee, followed closely, and there were several sharp engagements. The Union cavalry leader succeeded, however, in destroying a considerable length of track on both the Weldon and South Side railroads between June 22d and 27th. Then he turned for the works at Petersburg, but found it a difficult task. The woods were alive with Confederates. Infantry swarmed on every hand. Cavalry hung on the Federals' flanks and rear at every step. Artillery and wagon trains were being captured constantly. During the entire night of June 28th, the Union troopers were constantly

AN OASIS IN THE DESERT OF WAR

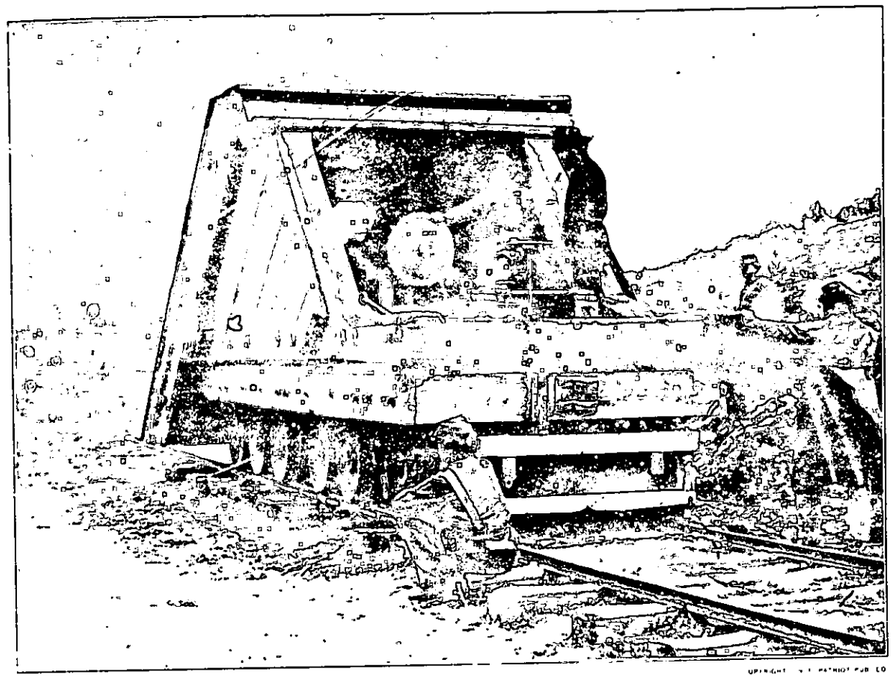
Throughout all the severe fighting south of Petersburg the Aiken house and its inhabitants remained unharmed, their safety respected by the combatants on both sides. The little farmhouse near the Weldon Railroad between the lines of the two hostile armies was remembered for years by many veterans on both sides. When Grant, after the battle of the Crater, began to force his lines closer to the west of Petersburg the Weldon Railroad became an objective and General Warren's command pushed forward on August 18, 1864, and after a sharp fight with the Confederates, established themselves in an advance position near Ream's Station. Three gallant assaults by the Confederates on the three succeeding days failed to dislodge the Federals. In these engagements the tide of battle ebbed and flowed through the woods and through thickets of vine and underbrush more impenetrable even than the "Wilderness."

harassed on every hand. They fell back in every direction. The two divisions became separated and, driven at full speed in front of the Confederate squadrons, became irreparably broken, and when they finally reached the Union lines—the last of them on July 2d—it was in straggling parties in wretched plight.

On June 25th, Sheridan returned from his raid on the Virginia Central Railroad. He had encountered Hampton and Fitzhugh Lee at Trevilian Station on June 11th, and turned back after doing great damage to the Railroad. His supply of ammunition did not warrant another engagement.

Now ensued about five weeks of quiet during which time both generals were strengthening their fortifications. However, the Federals were covertly engaged in an undertaking that was destined to result in a conspicuous failure. While the Northern soldiers were enduring the rays of a blistering July sun behind the entrenchments, one regiment was delving underneath in the cool, moist earth. It was the Forty-eighth Pennsylvania regiment of the Ninth Corps, made up mostly of miners from the upper Schuylkill coal-district of Pennsylvania. From June 25th until July 23d, these men were boring a tunnel from the rear of the Union works to a point underneath the Confederate fortifications. Working under the greatest difficulties, with inadequate tools for digging, and hand-barrows made out of cracker boxes, in which to carry away the earth, there was excavated in this time a passage-way five hundred and ten feet in length, terminating in left and right lateral galleries, thirty-seven and thirty-eight feet respectively. Into these lateral galleries eight thousand pounds of gunpowder were packed and tamped, and a fuse attached. On July 28th, everything was ready for the match to be applied and for the gigantic upheaval, sure to follow.

Grant, in order to get a part of Lee's army away, had sent Hancock's corps and two divisions of cavalry north of the James, as if he might attack Richmond. The ruse was successful. Preparations were then completed to fire the mine,



THE SAFE END OF THE MOVING BATTERY

The Federals were not the first to use a gun mounted on railway trucks. In the defense of Richmond during the Seven Days' and at the attack on Savage's Station the Confederates had mounted a field-piece on a flat-car and it did severe damage to the Federal camps. But they possessed no such formidable armored truck as this. Propelled by man-power, no puffing locomotive betrayed its whereabouts; and as it rolled along the tracks, firing a shot from time to time, it must have puzzled the Confederate outposts. This was no clumsy experimental toy, but a land gunboat on wheels, armored with iron-plating, backed by massive beams.

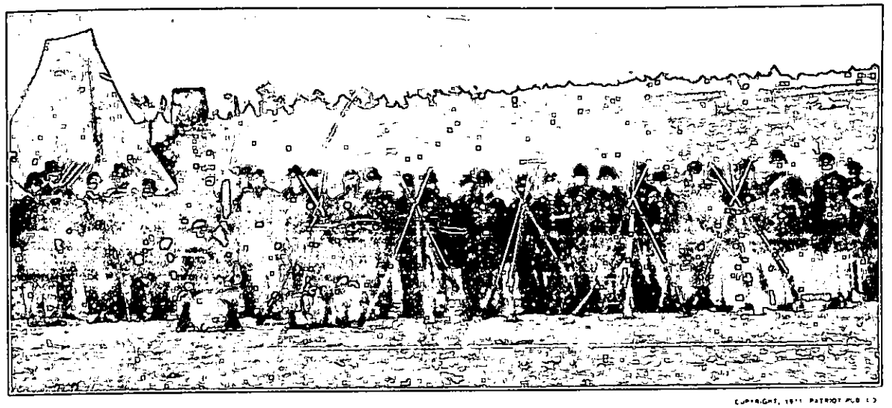
THE GLOBE TAVERN, WELDON RAILROAD

At the Globe Tavern General Warren made his headquarters after the successful advance of August 18th, and from here he directed the maneuvers by which the Federal lines to the westward of Petersburg were drawn closer and closer to cut off the last of Confederate communications. The country hereabout was the theater of constant activities on both sides during the autumn, and skirmishing between the hostile forces was kept up far into November. The old tavern was the very center of war's alarms. Yet the junior officers of the staff were not wholly deprived of amenities, since the Aiken house near by domiciled no less than seven young ladies, a fact that guaranteed full protection to the family during the siege. A strong safeguard was encamped within the garden railing to protect the house from intrusion by stragglers.

tear a gap in the Confederate works, and rush the Union troops into the opening. A division of colored soldiers, under General Ferrero, was selected and thoroughly drilled to lead the charge. Everything was in readiness for a successful attack, but at the last moment the colored division was replaced by the First Division of the Ninth Corps, under General Ledlie. The explosion was to take place at half-past three on the morning of July 30th. The appointed time had come. Everything required was in its place, ready to perform its part. Less than four hundred feet in front were the Confederate works, and directly beneath them were four tons of powder waiting to perform their deadly work.

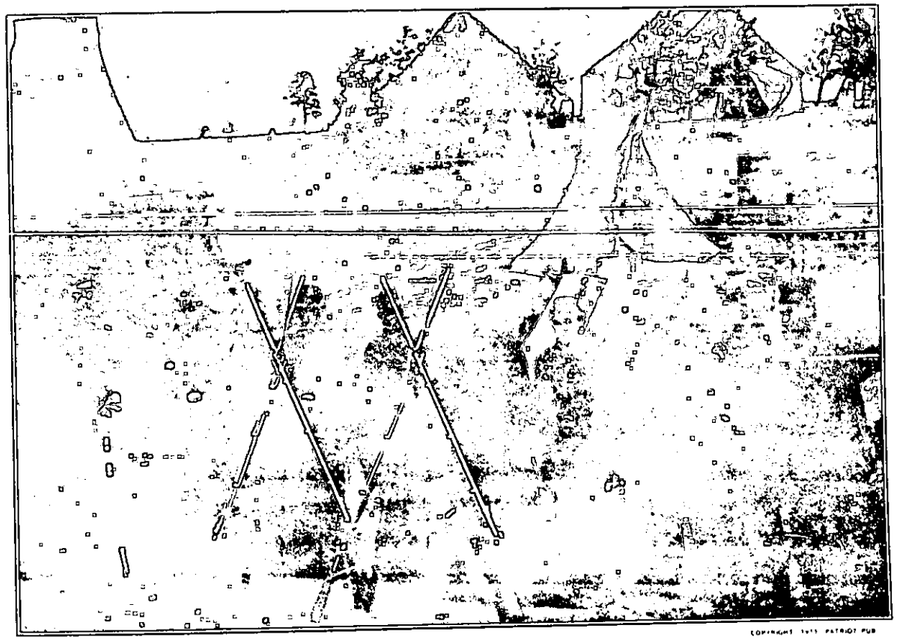
Then the Federals applied the match. The fuse sputtered as the consuming flame ate its way to the magazines within the tunnel. The men waited in breathless suspense. In another moment the earth would be rent by the subterranean upheaval. Minute after minute passed. The delay was unbearable. Something must have gone wrong. A gallant sergeant of the Forty-eighth Pennsylvania, Henry Rees by name, volunteered to enter the gallery and find out why the fuse had failed. It had parted within fifty feet of the powder. Rees returned for materials to resplice the fuse, and on the way out met Lieutenant Jacob Douty. The two men made the necessary repairs; the fire was again applied, and then—at twenty minutes to five – the ground underneath trembled as if by an earthquake, a solid mass of earth shot two hundred feet into the air, and a flame of fire burst from the vent as from a new-born volcano. Smoke rose after the ascending column. There in mid-air, earth, cannon, timbers, sand-bags, human beings, smoke, and fire, hung suspended an instant, and bursting asunder, fell back into and around the smoking crater where three hundred Confederates had met their end.

When the cloud of smoke had cleared away, the waiting troops of Ledlie charged, Colonel Marshall at the head of the Second Brigade, leading the way. They came to an immense



FEDERAL FIGHTERS AT REAMS' STATION

These men of Barlow's First division of the Second Corps, under command of Brigadier-General Nelson A. Miles, gallantly repulsed the second and third attacks by the Confederates upon Reams' Station, where Hancock's men were engaged in destroying the Weldon Railroad on August 24, 1864. In the upper picture is seen Company D of the famous "Clinton Guard," as the Sixty-first New York Infantry called itself. The picture was taken at Falmouth in April, 1863, and the trim appearance of the troops on dress parade indicates nothing of the heavy losses they sustained when at Fredericksburg, led by Colonel Miles, they fought with distinguished bravery against Jackson's men. Not only the regiment but its officers attained renown, for the regiment had the honor to be commanded by able soldiers. First, Francis C. Barlow was its colonel, then Nelson A. Miles, then Oscar A. Broady, and lastly George W. Scott.



opening, one hundred and seventy feet long, sixty feet wide, and thirty feet deep. They climbed the rim, looked down into the pit at the indescribable horrors, and then plunged into the crater. Here, they huddled in inextricable confusion. The two brigades poured in until the yawning pit was crowded with the disorganized mass. All semblance of organization vanished. In the confusion, officers lost power to recognize, much less to control, their own troops. A regiment climbed the slope, but finding that no one was following, went back to the crater.

The stunned and paralyzed Confederates were not long in grasping the situation. Batteries were soon planted where they could sweep the approach to the crater. This cut off the possibility of retreat. Then into the pit itself poured a stream of wasting fire, until it had become a veritable slaughter-house. Into this death-trap, the sun was sending down its shafts until it became as a furnace. Attempts were made to pass around the crater and occupy Cemetery Hill, which had been the objective of the Federals. But the withering fire prevented. The colored troops, who had been originally trained to lead in the charge, now tried to save the day. They passed by the side of the crater and started for the crest of the hill. They had not gone far when the Confederates delivered a countercharge that broke their ranks.

The Confederates were being rapidly reenforced. At eight o'clock Mahone's division of Georgians and Virginians swept onto the field, to the scene of the conflict. They had been hidden from view until they were almost ready for the charge. The Federals, seeing the intended attack, made ready to resist it. Lieutenant-Colonel Bross of the Twenty-ninth Colored regiment sprang upon the edge of the crater with the Union flag in his hand and was quickly struck down. The men began to scramble out after him, but before a line could be formed the Confederates were on them, and the Federals were driven back into the pit, already overflowing with the living and the dead. GRACIE'S SALIENT, AND OTHER FORTS ALONG THE TEN MILES OF DEFENSES rained into the awful chasm. The muskets left by the retreating Federals were thrown like pitchforks among the huddled troops. The shouts, the explosions, the screams, and groans added to the horror of the carnage. The clay in the pit was drenched with the blood of the dead and dying. The Southerners pushed in from both sides of the crater, forming a cordon of bayonets about it. The third and final charge was made, about two in the afternoon, and the bloody fight at the crater was ended as the brigade commanders followed Burnside's order to withdraw to the Federal lines. Both of Ledlie's brigade commanders were captured in the crater. The total Federal loss in this disastrous affair was over thirty-nine hundred, of whom all but one hundred were in the Ninth Corps. The Confederates lost about one thousand.

Dotted with formidable fortifications such as these, Confederate works stretched for ten miles around Petersburg. Fort Mahone was situated opposite the Federal Fort Sedgwick at the point where the hostile lines converged most closely after the battle of the Crater. Owing to the constant cannonade which it kept up, the Federals named it Fort Damnation, while Fort Sedgwick, which was no less active in reply, was known to the Confederates as Fort Hell. Gracie's salient, further north on the Confederate line, is notable as the point in front of which General John B. Gordon's gallant troops moved to the attack on Fort Stedman, the last desperate effort of the Confederates to break through the Federal cordon. The views of Gracie's salient show the French form of chevaux-de-frise, a favorite protection against attack much employed by the Confederates.

Now came a season of comparative quiet about Petersburg, except for the strategic maneuverings of the Federals who were trying to find weak places in the Confederate walls. On August 18th, however, Grant sent General Warren to capture the Weldon Railroad. Desperate fighting was to be expected, for this was one of the important routes along which supplies came to the Confederate capital. The Federal forces moved out quietly from their camp, but the alert Beauregard was ready for them. By the time Warren had reached the railroad, near the Globe Tavern, four miles from Petersburg, he was met by a force under Heth which at once drove him back. Rallying his troops, Warren entrenched on the railroad.

The fight was renewed on the next day, when, strongly reenforced by Lee, the Confederates burst suddenly upon the Federals. Mahone thrust his gallant division through the Federal skirmish line and then turned and fought from the rear, while another division struck the right wing. The Union force was soon in confusion; more than two thousand were taken prisoners, including General Joseph Hayes, and but for the arrival of the Ninth Corps, the field would have been lost. Two days later, Lee again attacked the position by massing

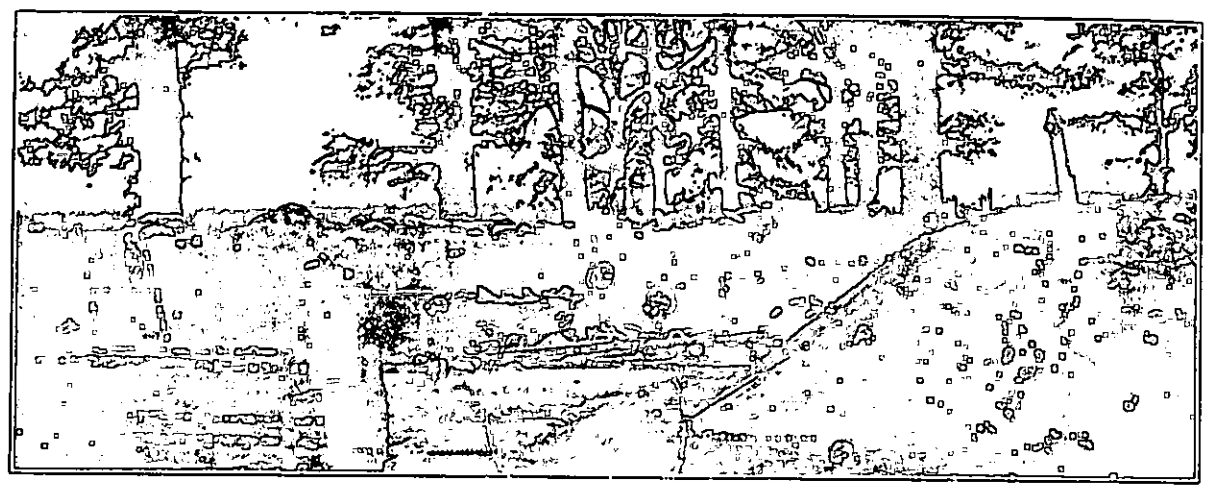
THE DEFENDERS' COUNTER-MINE

The sinister burrow opens within the Confederate fort Mahone, seen more fully at the top of the preceding page. Fort Sedgwick, directly opposite Fort Mahone, had been originally captured from the Confederates and its defenses greatly strengthened. So galling did its fire become, and so important was its position to the Confederates, that early in the siege they planned to lay a mine in order to regain it and perhaps break through the Federal lines and raise the siege. The distance across the intervening plain was but fifteen hundred feet. The Confederates run their main gallery somewhat more than a third of this distance before finally abandoning it, the difficulties of the undertaking having proved too great. This fort was named after General William Mahone, who was conspicuously engaged in the defense of Petersburg, and whose gallant conduct at the explosion of the Federal mine under Elliott's salient saved the day to the Confederates. Weak as were the defenses of Petersburg in comparison with the strong investing works of the Federals, they withstood all assaults during nine months except when Elliott's salient was captured during the battle of the Crater.



WHERE GORDON'S MEN ATTACKED, FORT STEDMAN

At Fort Stedman was directed the gallant onslaught of Gordon's men that resulted so disastrously for the Confederates on the 25th of March. For no troops could stand the heavy artillery and musketry fire directed on them from both flanks and from the rear at daylight. What was left of this brave division, shattered and broken, drifted back to their own line. It was the forlorn hope of Lee's beleaguered army. Fort McGilvery was less than one-half a mile from the Appomattox River, just north of the City Point Railroad, at the extreme right of the Federal line. It was one of the earliest forts completed, being built in July, 1864. Fort Morton, named after Major St. Clair Morton, killed by a sharpshooter's bullet in July, 1864, was renowned as the place from which the mine was dug, and from which the disastrous attempt to break through the Confederate lines was made on July 30th. Fort Morton lay almost in the center of the most active portion of the lines, and was about a mile south of Fort Stedman.

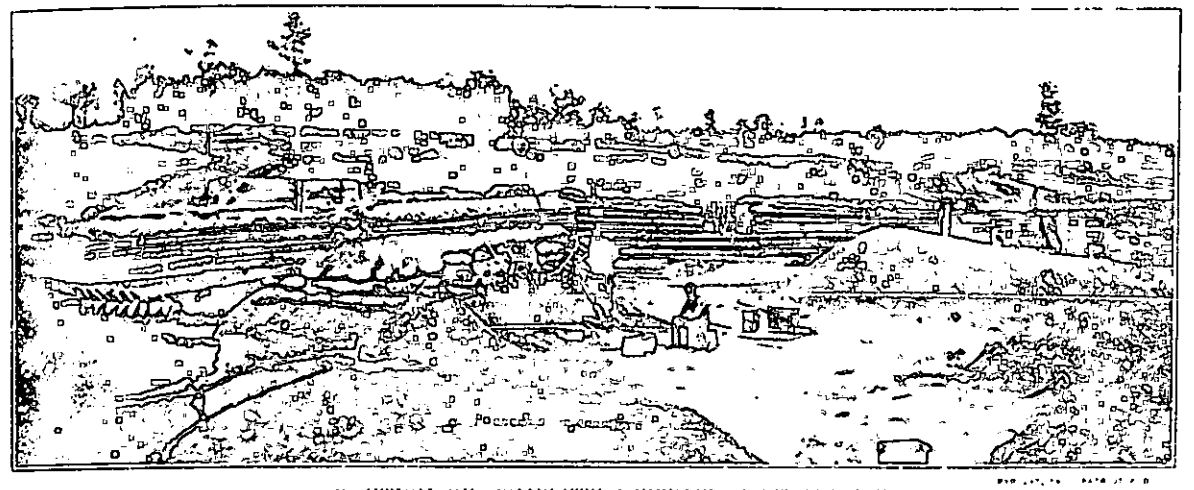
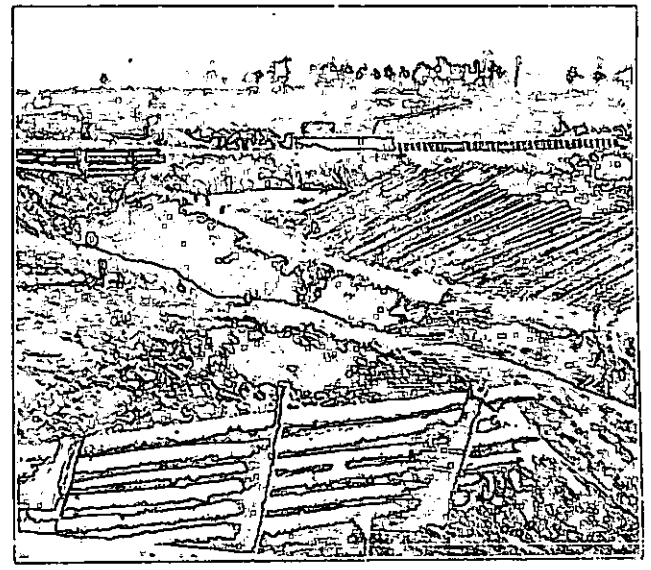
FORT MORTON, OPPOSITE THE CRATER



A POSITION OF COMPLETE DEFENSE, FORT MEIKLE

Almost every one of the forts in the long Federal line was named after some gallant officer who had lost his life in action. They might have been termed the memorial forts. The almost circular entrenchment, strengthened by logs and sandbags and defended by the formidable abatis of tree trunks, was named after Lieutenant-Colonel George W. Meikle, of the Twentieth Indiana Volunteers. From the position shown we are looking directly into Petersburg. Military observers have conceded that the fortifications surrounding



THE SWEEPING LINES OF FORT SEDGWICK

Petersburg were the most remarkable of any in the world. Before the end of October, 1864, the Army of the Potomac occupied a formidable cordon of defenses that stretched for more than thirty-two miles, and comprised thirty-six forts and fifty batteries. For years succeeding the war excursions were run from New York and from all parts of the country to this historic ground. It took three days to complete the tour. Then most of the forts were in the condition in which we see them pictured here.

thirty guns and pouring volley after volley of fierce fire into the ranks of blue. The Union lines stood firm and returned the fire. Finally, the fighting Mahone, with his matchless band, was brought to turn the tide. The attack was made with his usual impetuousness, but the blue-clad riflemen withstood the terrific charge, and the serried ranks of Mahone fell back. The Weldon Railroad was lost to the Confederacy.

Hancock, who had returned from the north side of the James, proceeded to destroy the road, without hindrance, until three days later, August 25th, when General A. P. Hill made his appearance and Hancock retreated to some hastily built breastworks at Ream's Station. The Confederate attack was swift and terrific. The batteries broke the Union lines. The men were panic-stricken and were put to flight. Hancock tried in vain to rally his troops, but for once this splendid soldier, who had often seen his men fall but not fail, was filled with agony at the rout of his soldiers. Their rifle-pits had been lost, their guns captured and turned upon them. Finally, General Nelson A. Miles succeeded in rallying a few men, formed a new line and, with the help of some dismounted cavalry, partly regained their former position. The night came on and, under cover of darkness, Hancock withdrew his shattered columns.

The two great opposing armies had now come to a deadlock. For weeks they lay in their entrenchments, each waiting for the other to move. Each knew that it was an almost hopeless task to assail the other's position. At the end of September, General Ord, with the Eighteenth Corps, and General Birney, with the Tenth, captured Fort Harrison north of the James, securing a vantage-point for threatening Richmond. The Union line had been extended to within three miles of the South Side Railroad, and on October 27th, practically the whole Army of the Potomac was put in motion to secure this other avenue of transportation to Richmond. After severe fighting for one day the attempt was given up, and the Union troops returned to the entrenchments in front of Petersburg.

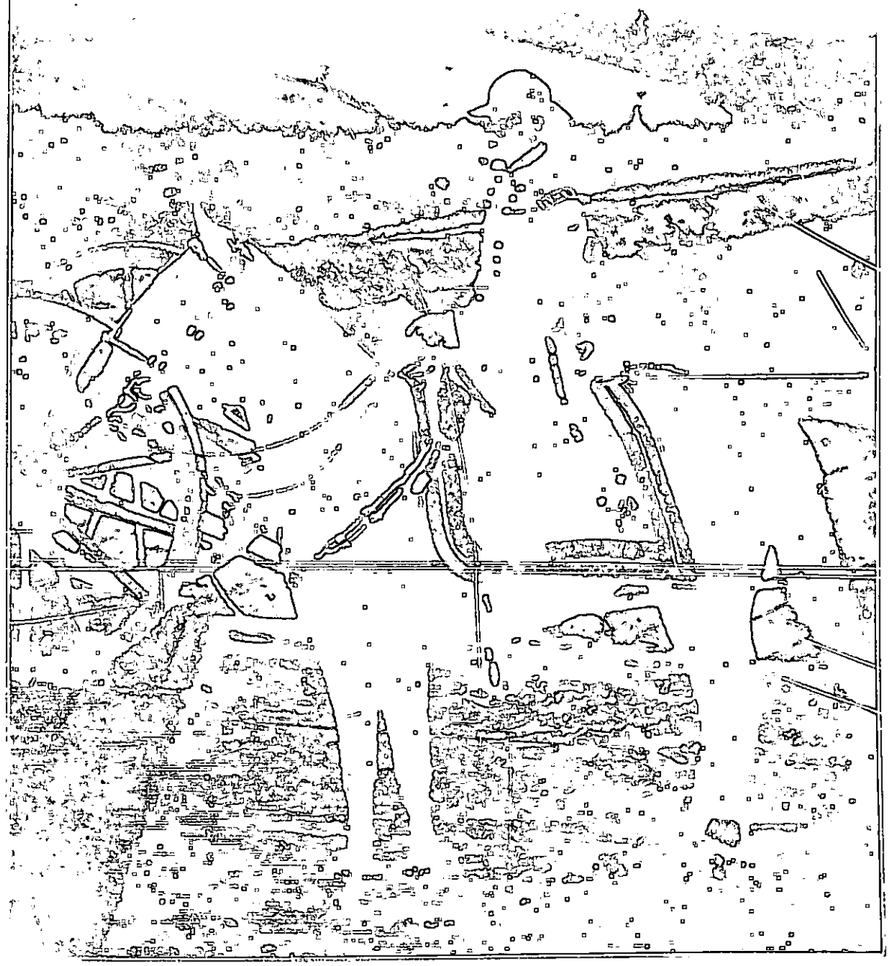
CLOSING IN

SHERMAN'S FINAL CAMPAIGNS



Grant determined to bring Sheridan from the Shenandoah, whence the bulk of Early's forces had been withdrawn, and send him to assist Sherman. Sheridan left Winchester February 27th, wreaking much destruction as he advanced, but circumstances compelled him to seek a new base at White House. On March 27th he formed a junction with the armies of the Potomac and the James. Such were the happenings that prompted Lee to prepare for the evacuation of Petersburg. And he might be able, in his rapid marches, to outdistance Grant, join his forces with those of Johnston, fall on Sherman, destroy one wing of the Union army and arouse the hopes of his soldiers, and prolong the life of his Government.

General Grant knew the condition of Lee's army and, with the unerring instinct of a military leader, surmised what the plan of the Southern general must be. He decided to move on the left, destroy both the Danville and South Side railroads, and put his army in better condition to pursue. The move was ordered for March 29th.

General Lee, in order to get Grant to look another way for a while, decided to attack Grant's line on the right, and gain some of the works. This would compel Grant to draw some of his force from his left and secure a way of escape to the west. This bold plan was left for execution to the gallant Georgian, General John B. Gordon, who had successfully led the reverse attack at Cedar Creek, in the Shenandoah, in October, 1864. Near the crater stood Fort Stedman. Between it and the Confederate front, a distance of about one hundred and fifty yards, was a strip of firm earth, in full view of both picket lines. Across this space some deserters had passed to the Union entrenchments. General Gordon took advantage of this fact and accordingly selected his men, who, at the sound of the signal gun, should disarm the Federal pickets, while fifty more men were to cross the open space quickly with axes and cut away the abatis, and three hundred others were to rush through the opening, and capture the fort and guns.

THE MOLE-HILL RAMPARTS, NEAR THE CRATER

These well-made protections of sharpened spikes, as formidable as the pointed spears of a Roman legion, are chevaux-de-frise, of the Confederates before their main works at Petersburg. They were built after European models, the same as employed in the Napoleonic wars, and were used by both besiegers and besieged along the lines south of the Appomattox. Those shown in this picture were in front of the entrenchments near Elliott's salient and show how effectually it was protected from any attempt to storm the works by rushing tactics on the part of the Federal infantry. Not far from here lies the excavation of the Crater.

THE SIEGE AND FALL OF PETERSBURG

It is not improbable that Grant might have made more headway by leaving a sufficient part of his army in the trenches in front of Petersburg and by moving with a heavy force far to the west upon Lee's communications; or, if it were determined to capture the place à main forte, by making a massed attack upon some point in the center after suitable mining operations had weakened Lee's defenses and prepared for such an operation. But the end was to come with opening spring. To the far-sighted, this was no longer doubtful. The South must succumb to the greater material resources of the North, despite its courage and its sacrifices.—Colonel T. A. Dodge, U.S.A., in "A Bird's-Eye View of Our Civil War."

DURING the winter of 1864–65, General Lee, fighting Grant without, was fighting famine within. The shivering, half-clad soldiers of the South crouched over feeble fires in their entrenchments. The men were exposed to the rain, snow, and sleet; sickness and disease soon added their horrors to the desolation. The finances of the Government were almost gone. The life of the Confederacy was ebbing fast.

Behind Union breastworks, early in 1865, General Grant was making preparations for the opening of a determined campaign with the coming of spring. Mile after mile had been added to his entrenchments, and they now extended to Hatcher's Run on the left. The Confederate lines had been stretched until they were so thin that there was constant danger of breaking. A. P. Hill was posted on the right; Gordon and Anderson held the center, and Longstreet was on the left. Union troops were mobilizing in front of Petersburg. By February 1st, Sherman was fairly off from Savannah on his northward march to join Grant. He was weak in cavalry and

A FEW STEPS NEARER THE PICKET LINE

IN BEHIND THE SHELTER

For nine months of '64–'65 the musket-balls sang past these Federal picket posts, in advance of Federal Fort Sedgwick, called by the Confederates "Fort Hell." Directly opposite was the Confederate Fort Mahone, which the Federals, returning the compliment, had dubbed "Fort Damnation." Between the two lines, separated by only fifty yards, sallies and counter-sallies were continual occurrences after dark. In stealthy sorties one side or the other frequently captured the opposing pickets before alarm could be given. No night was without its special hazard. During the day the pastime here was sharp-shooting with muskets and rifled cannon.

The Siege and Fall of Petersburg

March 1865

At four o'clock on the morning of March 25, 1865, Gordon had everything in readiness. His chosen band wore white strips of cloth across the breast, that they might distinguish each other in the hand-to-hand fight that would doubtless ensue. Behind these men half of Lee's army was massed to support the attack. In the silence of the early morning, a gunshot rang out from the Confederate works. Not a Federal picket-shot was heard. The axemen rushed across the open and soon the thuds of their axes told of the cutting away of the abatis. The three hundred surged through the entrance, overpowered the gunners, captured batteries to the right and to the left, and were in control of the situation. Gordon's corps of about five thousand was on hand to sustain the attack but the remaining reserves, through failure of the guides, did not come, and the general found himself cut off with a rapidly increasing army surrounding him.

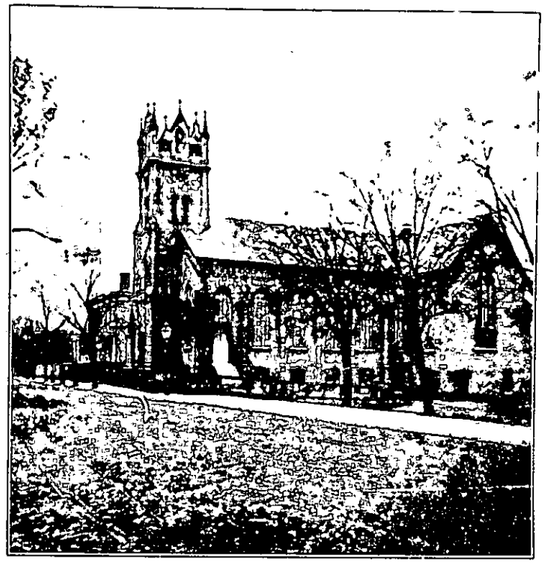
Fort Haskell, on the left, began to throw its shells. Under its cover, heavy columns of Federals sent by General Parke, now commanding the Ninth Corps, pressed forward. The Confederates resisted the charge, and from the captured Fort Stedman and the adjoining batteries poured volley after volley on Willcox's advancing lines of blue. The Northerners fell back, only to re-form and renew the attack. This time they secured a footing, and for twenty minutes the fighting was terrific. Again they were repulsed. Then across the brow of the hill swept the command of Hartranft. The blue masses literally poured onto the field. The furious musketry, and artillery directed by General Tidball, shrivelled up the ranks of Gordon until they fled from the fort and its neighboring batteries in the midst of withering fire, and those who did not were captured. This was the last aggressive effort of the expiring Confederacy in front of Petersburg, and it cost three thousand men. The Federal loss was not half that number.

The affair at Fort Stedman did not turn Grant from his plans against the Confederate right. With the railroads here

PRAYERS FOR RELIEF AND PRAYERS FOR VICTORY

This church at Petersburg stood near the tobacco warehouses shown in the lower picture, and here the Federal prisoners confined in the old brick building were praying for victory as they listened to the boom of cannon and the rattle of musketry through the terrible winter of '64 and '65. But every Sunday, in this church, prayers to the God of Battles for relief from the invader were raised in fervent zeal of spirit. In all the camps, and in all the cities of the North and South, throughout the war, each side, believing firmly in the justice of its cause, had regularly and earnestly thus appealed to the Almighty for the triumph of its arms.

In the Southern army in particular, religious fervor was high. During the previous winter, while Lee's troops were encamped on the Rapidan, revivals had swept nearly every soldier into the church. General Gordon says that "not only on the Sabbath day, but during the week, night after night, for long periods these services continued, increasing in attendance and interest until they brought under religious influence the great body of the army. Along the mountainsides and in the forest, where the Southern camps were pitched, the rocks and woods rang with appeals for holiness and consecration, with praises for past mercies and earnest prayers for future protection and deliverance. Thousands of these brave followers of Southern banners became consistent and devoted soldiers of the Cross." And the same officer recalls that during the siege of Petersburg, especially after the attack on Fort Stedman, religious devotion was uncoded. "From the commander-in-chief to the privates in the ranks, there was a deep and sincere religious feeling in Lee's army. Whenever it was convenient or practicable, these hungry but unyielding men were holding prayer-meetings. Their supplications were fervent and often inspiring."



WHERE PRAYER ROSE FOR THE WANING CAUSE

WHERE PRISONERS PRAYED FOR LIBERTY

On the memorable 2d of April, in the Richmond church in which he had been baptized and confirmed scarcely three years before, President Jefferson Davis received the ominous tidings sent by Lee to the capital of the Confederacy that both Petersburg and Richmond would have to be evacuated before the morning of April 4th. There followed a night of terror.

The Siege and Fall of Petersburg

destroyed, Richmond would be completely cut off. On the morning of the 29th, as previously arranged, the movement began. Sheridan swept to the south with his cavalry, as if he were to fall upon the railroads. General Warren, with fifteen thousand men, was working his way through the tangled woods and low swamps in the direction of Lee's right. At the same time, Lee stripped his entrenchments at Petersburg as much as he dared and hurried General Anderson, with infantry, and Fitzhugh Lee, with cavalry, forward to hold the roads over which he hoped to escape. On Friday morning, March 31st, the opposing forces, the Confederates much reenforced, found themselves at Dinwiddie Court House. The woods and swamps prevented the formation of a regular line of battle. Lee made his accustomed flank movement, with heavy loss to the Federals as they tried to move in the swampy forests. The Northerners finally were ready to advance when it was found that Lee had fallen back. During the day and night, reenforcements were coming in from all sides. The Confederates had taken their position at Five Forks.

Early the next afternoon, the 1st of April, Sheridan, reenforced by Warren, was arranging his troops for battle. The day was nearly spent when all was in readiness. The sun was not more than two hours high when the Northern army moved toward that of the South, defended by a breastwork behind a dense undergrowth of pines. Through this mass of timber the Federals crept with bayonets fixed. They charged upon the Confederates, but, at the same time, a galling fire poured into them from the left, spreading dismay and destruction in their midst. The intrepid Sheridan urged his black battle-charger, the famous Rienzi, now known as Winchester, up and down the lines, cheering his men on in the fight. He seemed to be everywhere at once. The Confederate left was streaming down the White Oak Road. But General Crawford had reached a cross-road, by taking a circuitous route, and the Southern army was thus shut off from retreat. The Federai

To this gallant young Georgia officer, just turned thirty-three at the time, Lee entrusted the last desperate effort to break through the tightening Federal lines, March 25, 1865. Lee was confronted by the dilemma of either being starved out of Petersburg and Richmond, or of getting out himself and uniting his army to that of Johnston in North Carolina, to crush Sherman before Grant could reach him. Gordon was to begin this latter, almost impossible, task by an attack on Fort Stedman, which the Confederates believed to be the weakest point in the Federal fortifications. The position had been captured from them in the beginning, and they knew that the nature of the ground and its nearness to their own lines had made it difficult to strengthen it very much. It was planned to surprise the fort before daylight. Below are seen the rabbit-like burrows of Gracie's Salient, past which Gordon led his famished men. When the order came to go forward, they did not flinch, but hurled themselves bravely against fortifications far stronger than their own. Three columns of a hundred picked men each moved down the slope shown on the left and advanced in the darkness against Stedman. They were to be followed by a division. Through the gap which the storming parties were expected to open in the Federal lines, Gordon's columns would rush in both directions and a cavalry force was to sweep on and destroy the pontoon bridges across the Appomattox and to raid City Point, breaking up the Federal base. It was no light task, for although Fort Stedman itself was weak, it was flanked by Battery No. 10 on the right and by Battery No. 11 on the left. An attacking party on the right would be exposed to an enfilading fire in crossing the plain; while on the left the approach was difficult because of ravines, one of which the Confederate engineers had turned into a pond by damming a creek. All night long General Gordon's wife, with the brave women of Petersburg, sat up tearing strips of white cloth, to be tied on the arms of the men in the storming parties so that they could tell friend from foe in the darkness and confusion of the assault. Before the sleep-dazed Federals could offer effective resistance, Gordon's men had possession of the fort and the batteries. Only after one of the severest engagements of the siege were the Confederates driven back.

APRIL SECOND—WHERE LEE WATCHED

From this mound General Lee watched the final Federal attack begin near Hatcher's Run on the morning of April 2, 1865. It was a serious party of officers that gathered in this battery on the inner line of Confederate fortifications before Petersburg. On the preceding days at Hatcher's Run, and again at Five Forks, Lee had attempted to break through the besiegers, but the efforts were futile, and no sooner had they ceased than the Federal army began to gather itself for the last grapple. All night of April 1st, till four in the morning, the Federal artillery had kept up a terrific bombardment along the whole line, and at daybreak Lee saw the Sixth Corps advancing to the assault. As they broke through the Confederate lines and wheeled to attack Fort Gregg, Lee called his staff about him, telling them to witness a most gallant defense. A moment later they saw the Stars and Stripes unfurled over the parapet. The depleted and worn-out Confederates had spent themselves to the last gasp. Not even Lee's veterans could fight starvation and overwhelming numbers at once. "This is a sad business!" were Lee's words as he turned to his staff. Couriers were bringing in reports of disasters all along his lines, and he gave the orders necessary for the holding of such of the interior defenses as would enable the Army of Northern Virginia to abandon Petersburg and Richmond.

APRIL SECOND—"THIS IS A SAD BUSINESS"

As his general watched, this boy fought to stem the Federal rush—but fell, his breast pierced by a bayonet, in the trenches of Fort Mahone. It is heart-rending to look at a picture such as this; it is sad to think of it and to write about it. Here is a boy of only fourteen years, his face innocent of a razor, his feet unshod and stockingless in the bitter April weather. It is to be hoped that the man who slew him has forgotten it, for this face would haunt him surely. Many who fought in the blue ranks were young, but in the South there were whole companies made up of such boys as this. At the battle of Newmarket the scholars of the Virginia Military Institute, the eldest seventeen and the youngest twelve, marched from the classrooms under arms, joined the forces of General Breckinridge, and aided by their historic charge to gain a brilliant victory over the Federal General Sigel. The never-give-in spirit was implanted in the youth of the Confederacy, as well as in the hearts of the grizzled veterans. Lee had inspired them, but in addition to this inspiration, as General Gordon writes, "every man of them was supported by their extraordinary consecration, resulting from the conviction that he was fighting in the defense of home and the rights of his State. Hence their unfaltering faith in the justice of the cause, their fortitude in the extremest privations, their readiness to stand shoeless and shivering in the trenches at night and to face any danger at their leader's call."

PRISONERS TO PHIL SHERIDAN

This group of the five thousand Confederate prisoners captured March 31st is eloquent of the tragedy in progress. Dire was the extremity of the Confederate cause in March, 1865. The words of the gallant leader in the last desperate and forlorn hope that charged Fort Stedman, General Gordon, give a pen-picture of the condition of the Southern fighting men: "Starvation, literal starvation, was doing its deadly work. So depleted and poisoned was the blood of many of Lee's men from insufficient and unsound food that a slight wound, which would probably not have been reported at the beginning of the war, would often cause blood-poison, gangrene and death, yet the spirits of these brave men seemed to rise as their condition grew more desperate." But not only was it physical ailments and consequent inability to fight their best which brought about the downfall, it was numbers, the overwhelming numbers that were opposed against them. In an interview with General Gordon, Lee laid before him his reports, which showed how completely he understood the situation. Of his own fifty thousand men but thirty-five thousand were fit for duty. Lee's estimate of the forces of Grant was between one hundred and forty thousand and one hundred and fifty thousand. Coming up from Knoxville was Schofield with an estimated force of thirty thousand superb troops. From the valley Grant was bringing up nearly twenty thousand more, against whom, as Lee expressed it, he "could oppose scarcely a vidette." Sherman was approaching from North Carolina, and his force when united with Scofield's would reach eighty thousand. It was impossible, and yet it was after this, that Gordon made his charge. South of Hatcher's Run, at the very westernmost part of the Confederate entrenchments, Sheridan fell upon the Confederate flank. It was a complete victory. With General Merritt and General Griffin sweeping in, the cavalry charged the works and five thousand Confederates were taken prisoners, besides those killed and wounded. The Federal loss was less than seven hundred. This was the last day of March. Lined up here we see some of these captured thousands about to receive their first square meal in many months.

FULL RATIONS AT LAST

AT FORT MAHONE—THE FIRST TO MEET THE ONSLAUGHT

The tall young Southerner stretched here was outside the walls of Fort Mahone, and with scores of comrades met the first shock when the onsweep of the massed lines in blue came roaring down like a torrent upon the outer works. His musket, with the ramrod out, lies beside him, showing that he has even stayed to load; the ground is strewn with cartridges frantically torn open; his hands are grasped tightly over the gaping wound through his body; he will be laid away to rest on the very spot he has so splendidly defended.

When Lee, looking toward Fort Gregg as the Federals attacked on April 2d, said, "You will see a brave defense," he spoke from intimate knowledge of his men. But even if they had been twice the number, they could not have done more than they did. If they had had three lives apiece they might have laid them down no more bravely nor uselessly. God was on the side of the bigger army. But in the outflanking trenches filled with mud, in the corners of the abatis, in the angles of the walls, and in the very last ditch, groups of men in gray fought with the desperation almost of wild animals with retreat cut off. The bayonet and clubbed musket did bloody work here; men rolled and grappled with each other in the half darkness of the early dawn, rising to their knees to fight again. It was relentless, terrible, and from the romantic point of view magnificent. Yet as we look at these poor heaps of clay, the magnificence has vanished, horror and sorrow are the sensations that are aroused. Dead "Reb" or fallen "Yank," these men who fell, though their voices are stilled, cry from their gory beds that such things may come to pass no more: their faces and forms, twisted as they fell, speak more eloquently than any words could, for peace

FRESH AMMUNITION IN THE PATH OF THE CHARGE

A veritable battle-photograph, in the fresh path of the charge within the Confederate works that had so long held the Federals back. This picture was taken very shortly after the rattle of their muskets had rung the knell of Petersburg. Beyond the parapet are the Federal lines and the intervening plain over which the men came at the double-quick that morning. Some regiment has halted here to replenish its ammunition. Boxes of cartridges have been hurried up and impatiently broken open. There was no time for the eager men to fill pouches and belts. Grabbing handfuls of the cartridges, they have thrust them into their pockets or the breasts of their jackets. Then, leaving many of the boxes but half emptied, they pressed on, loading as they ran. The picture is an eloquent bit of still life, even the belts and cartridge-pouches cast away in impatience tell of the hurry and heat of battle.

It was the grand old Sixth Corps that crowned its splendid record on April 2d in the last great charge of the war upon an entrenched position. Silently the troops had been brought out on the night of the 1st and placed in position just in the rear of their own picket line. The darkness hid the intended movement even from the watchful eyes of the Confederate pickets. Orders for the strictest silence had been imposed upon each man. But suddenly the pickets broke out firing, and it was only with great exertions that the officers quieted the Federal outposts. The men in the columns had maintained their positions without a sound—not a shot fired, not a word uttered. At half-past four in the early morning a signal gun from Fort Fisher boomed and flashed through the early light. Rushing forward, breaking the Confederate line of outposts, down streamed the blue masses upon the main line of the defenses. Into their faces the men in gray poured deadly volleys from behind the earthworks and lines of spiked abatis. The latter were rolled aside, carried by main force and tossed into the ditches. General Wright, in command of this body of men, knew from the shouts even before he saw the flag upon the breastworks that the wedge had been driven home. Leaving behind their own dead and wounded lying mingled with the bodies of the brave defenders, without waiting for orders, men from each division of the Sixth Corps pressed ahead, broke up the South Side Railroad and cut the telegraph wires. When the officers had at length reined the ardor of their troops and re-formed the lines, a large part of the corps wheeled to the left and dashed along the Confederate entrenchments, soon overcame all resistance and swept victoriously forward as far as Hatcher's Run, capturing artillery and a large number of prisoners. There they were again re-formed, marched back to the original point of attack, and thence pushed forward in conjunction with the Twenty-fourth Corps to complete the investment of Petersburg. In this advance some Confederate batteries, very dashingly handled, inflicted considerable loss until they were driven behind the inner lines of entrenchment, when the Union troops were halted with their left resting on the Appomattox. Petersburg had fallen. The end was only a week away.

cavalry had dismounted and was doing its full share of work. The Confederates soon found themselves trapped, and the part of their army in action that day was nearly annihilated. About five thousand prisoners were taken.

With night came the news of the crushing blow to Lee. General Grant was seated by his camp-fire surrounded by his staff, when a courier dashed into his presence with the message of victory. Soon from every great gun along the Union line belched forth the sheets of flame. The earth shook with the awful cannonade. Mortar shells made huge parabolas through the air. The Union batteries crept closer and closer to the Confederate lines and the balls crashed into the streets of the doomed city. The bombardment of Petersburg was on.

At dawn of the 2nd of April the grand assault began. The Federal troops sprang forward with a rush. Despite the storms of grape and canister, the Sixth Corps plunged through the battery smoke, and across the walls, pushing the brave defenders to the inner works. The whole corps penetrated the lines and swept everything before it toward Hatcher's Run. Some of the troops even reached the South Side Railroad, where the brave General A. P. Hill fell mortally wounded.

Everywhere, the blue masses poured into the works. General Ord, on the right of the Sixth Corps, helped to shut the Confederate right into the city. General Parke, with the Ninth Corps, carried the main line. The thin gray line could no longer stem the tide that was engulfing it. The Confederate troops south of Hatcher's Run fled to the west, and fought General Miles until General Sheridan and a division from Meade appeared on the scene. By noon the Federals held the line of the outer works from Fort Gregg to the Appomattox. The last stronghold carried was Fort Gregg, at which the men of Gibbon's corps had one of the most desperate struggles of the war. The Confederates now fell back to the inner fortifications and the siege of Petersburg came to an end.

McLEAN'S RESIDENCE AT THE BEGINNING OF THE WAR—BEAUREGARD'S HEADQUARTERS AT BULL RUN

THE HOMES OF WILMER McLEAN WHERE THE BATTLES BEGAN AND ENDED

By an extraordinary coincidence the two historic houses on this and the facing page belonged to the same man. In 1861, Wilmer McLean lived near Manassas Station, and his house was chosen by General Beauregard as headquarters. In the engagement of July 18th, preceding the great battle, a Federal cannon-ball landed in the fireplace and spoiled the general's dinner. During the famous battle of the following Sunday the household was subject to the constant alarms of a long-fought field. To avoid the scene of active military operations McLean removed to the village of Appomattox and spent nearly four years tranquilly enough. But he found himself once more the center of warlike activity. Only half a mile west of the town Grant's messenger had found Lee resting under an apple-tree. After reading Grant's letter, he started with his military secretary for Appomattox Court House. In the village they met Wilmer McLean, who, after stopping for a moment at the first house they came to, conducted the party to his own home. It was Sunday, three years and nine months since that Sunday of Bull Run. At half-past one, April 9th, the negotiations took place to the left of the central doorway; during them General Lee sat by a small oval table near the window, half hidden by the pillar at the top of the step. For the table General Sheridan paid Mr. McLean twenty dollars in gold. The rest of the furniture used on that historic occasion was largely seized by others of those present. The house itself remained no longer in obscurity, but became one of the most famous landmarks in American history.

PORTRAIT TO BE UNVEILED

Chesterfield to Honor Judge Jefferson

By JOE MARSH

A judge with a stern exterior that belies his rather merciful decisions will be honored Monday at Chesterfield Courthouse.

He is John Garland Jefferson Jr., 75, who was judge of Chesterfield County Circuit Court for 18 years. A portrait of the judge, commissioned by the Chesterfield - Colonial Heights Bar Association, will be unveiled at 10 a.m.

The artist, David Silvette, like others found out what a warm and human person Judge Jefferson is despite his serious and somewhat stern mein.

30 YEARS A LAWYER

Silvette painted the portrait in Jefferson's very familiar surroundings, his office at Amelia off from the courthouse square. There, in the one-story frame building that had served as Jefferson's law office for almost 30 years before he became a Circuit judge in 1938, the artist was more on exhibit than the [illegible]ge.

[illegible]he judge pulled in friends [illegible] the street to see Silvette's [illegible]ork.

[illegible]sure got his bow tie [illegible]as the most familiar [illegible] Jefferson wears his [illegible] angle and all his photographs show the "crooked" tie.

The judge, who chews tobacco, parked his spittoon over to one side during the sittings but refrained from smoking. When relaxing, Jefferson dangles a cigaret from his lips at about a 35 degree angle and chats.

Silvette described him, with respect, as a typical Virginia country judge.

RELATED TO JEFFERSON

The judge is descended from an uncle of Thomas Jefferson, founder of the University of Virginia, where the judge studied law.

Jefferson's main hobby used to be operating his family's dairy farm near Amelia but he rented it out less than a year ago. He now concentrates in spare time on watching construction projects.

"He is an architect in his own mind and will sit all day and watch people building," said a close friend. Originally, Jefferson wanted to be an architect-engineer but economics in 1906 dictated a law career because of two years' less schooling needed.

Jefferson, a bachelor is a very ardent Presbyterian and a devout "dry." He lives in a commodious frame house, built about 1915. Years ago, its halls resounded to the steps of 12 to 15 relatives. Now there are only three occupants: the judge a brother, H. Mason Jefferson, retired from the tobacco business, and a sister, Miss Mary Jefferson, a Lynchburg teacher and summer resident of Amelia.

Another brother, Peyton G., is a lawyer in Victoria.

DOESN'T LINGER

The judge is not one to linger on after court sessions are over. If in a Fourth Circuit locality other than Amelia, he hops in his car and heads home.

Tall and gaunt, Jefferson stands ram-rod straight.

In 1956, when the new 37th Circuit (Chesterfield and Colonial Heights) was created, the bar association praised Jefferson's "friendly dignity," his patience and the manner in which he had performed ever-increasing judicial duties in Chesterfield. He estimated that removal of Chesterfield from the Fourth Circuit cut his case load by 50 per cent. The [illegible] judge's duties had [illegible] doubled since 1938.

Frederick T. Gray, bar association president, will present the portrait when Chesterfield Circuit Judge Walter [illegible] will accept for the court.

Goyne's Status Is Satisfactory

Arthur Goyne, 68, brother of Chesterfield Supervisor Harold T. Goyne Sr., continued in satisfactory condition today at Medical College Hospital following a traffic mishap.

Goyne, of Route 3, Chesterfield ran into the side of a passing car when he started to cross St. Rt. 10 Wednesday night to enter a friend's car, Trooper T. B. Skeens said.

Driver of the passing eastbound car was listed as James Burton Dickerson, 23, of Route 15, Richmond.

Bolte and Morgan Are Selected As 'Most Outstanding Citizens'

Chosen By Ruritans

DINWIDDIE — Approximately 150 members of Dinwiddie County Ruritans Clubs met here Monday night, Dec. 4, to honor their chosen "outstanding senior and junior citizens."

Bronze statuettes were presented to the winners: William E. (Billy) Bolte, 37, deputy treasurer of the county, and Billy Morgan, 19, of Ford, son of Lt. Col. William E. Morgan (retired) and Mrs. Morgan.

W. Roy Smith, representative in the House of Delegates from Dinwiddie County and Petersburg, spoke on "Citizenship" following the dinner and presented the awards.

The four Ruritan Clubs included the Dinwiddie, Gerow, McKenney, and Wilson-Hebron-Ford organizations with good representation from each.

Dinwiddie Native

Bolte is a native of Dinwiddie Courthouse and was active in school affairs when he attended Dinwiddie High School where he was captain of the basketball team.

He served in the navy's Medical Corps during World War II, on Guam and the Hawaiian Islands. He attended King's Business College in Raleigh.

Bolte is secretary-treasurer of the Dinwiddie Civil War Centennial Commission and an elder in Bott Memorial Presbyterian Church, in DeWitt.

He is worshipful master of Dinwiddie Lodge 136, AF and AM, and a past president of the Dinwiddie Ruritans. He has served as commander and adjutant of Dinwiddie County Post 149, American Legion.

His letter of nomination for the honor cited his "warm and sincere personality."

Mrs. Bolte is the former Miss Lulie T. Wright and they have one child, Caroline, who is three this month. Bolte's parents were the late Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Bolte of DeWitt.

Morgan was commended for his outstanding work as president of the Corinth Methodist Youth Fellowship and for his efforts in the MYF programs, membership drives, and its welfare projects.

He is a graduate of the Midway Highway High School in the class of 1960. Last year he attended the University of Richmond and this year is employed by the State Highway Department and hopes to return to the university next year.

Civic Worker

During the present year he has devoted much time to volunteer welfare campaigns and is the youngest member of the Ford Volunteer Fire Department.

In his talk following the dinner, Smith said, "It is a rare thing that a person is as concerned with his responsibilities as with his rights and privileges. And, without assuming responsibility, there will soon be no rights and privileges."

It was refreshing to attend a meeting which emphasized the qualities of good citizenship, he said. "Citizens in our fore fathers' time were mostly concerned with freedom of religion and speech," he said. "Today, we are more concerned with freedom from want and fear.

"Training for good citizenship should begin in the home," he emphasized, "with love, care, and the kind of home life which gives security."

Smith urged that citizens speak up for or against issues, rather than to leave all of them to politicians. "Every citizen has his obligations in government," he said. "If he doesn't fill it, someone will fill it for him."

Smith was introduced by Arthur H. Richardson of Dinwiddie, also a representative from Dinwiddie County and Petersburg in the state legislature. William Lewis Driskill, president of the Dinwiddie Ruritans, opened the meeting. L. Meredith acted as master of ceremonies for the program.

Musical numbers were given by a choral ensemble from Petersburg.

PORTRAIT TO BE UNVEILED

Chesterfield to Honor Judge Jefferson

By JOE MARSH

A judge with a stern exterior that belies his rather merciful decisions will be honored Monday at Chesterfield Courthouse.

He is John Garland Jefferson Jr., 75, who was judge of Chesterfield County Circuit Court for 18 years. A portrait of the judge, commissioned by the Chesterfield - Colonial Heights Bar Association, will be unveiled at 10 a.m.

The artist, David Silvette, like others found out what a warm and human person Judge Jefferson is despite his serious and somewhat stern mein.

30 YEARS A LAWYER

Silvette painted the portrait in Jefferson's very familiar surroundings, his office at Amelia off from the courthouse square. There, in the one-story frame building that had served as Jefferson's law office for almost 30 years before he became a Circuit judge in 1938, the artist was more on exhibit than the judge.

The judge pulled in friends from the street to see Silvette's work.

Sure got his bow tie [illegible] as the most familiar Jefferson wears his [illegible] slight angle and all his photographs show the "crooked" tie.

The judge, who chews tobacco, parked his spittoon over to one side during the sittings but refrained from smoking. When relaxing, Jefferson dangles a cigaret from his lips at about a 35 degree angle and chats.

Silvette described him, with respect, as a typical Virginia country judge.

RELATED TO JEFFERSON

The judge is descended from an uncle of Thomas Jefferson, founder of the University of Virginia, where the judge studied law.

Jefferson's main hobby used to be operating his family's dairy farm near Amelia but he rented it out less than a year ago. He now concentrates in spare time on watching construction projects.

"He is an architect in his own mind and will sit all day and watch people building," said a close friend. Originally, Jefferson wanted to be an architect-engineer but economics in 1906 dictated a law career because of two years' less schooling needed.

Jefferson, a bachelor is a very ardent Presbyterian and a devout "dry." He lives in a commodious frame house, built about 1915. Years ago, its halls resounded to the steps of 12 to 15 relatives. Now there are only three occupants: the judge a brother, H. Mason Jefferson, retired from the tobacco business, and a sister, Miss Mary Jefferson, a Lynchburg teacher and summer resident of Amelia.

Another brother, Peyton G., is a lawyer in Victoria.

DOESN'T LINGER

The judge is not one to linger on after court sessions are over. If in a Fourth Circuit locality other than Amelia, he hops in his car and heads home.

Tall and gaunt, Jefferson stands ram-rod straight.

In 1956, when the new 37th Circuit (Chesterfield and Colonial Heights) was created, the bar association praised Jefferson's "friendly dignity," his patience and the manner in which he had performed ever-increasing judicial duties in Chesterfield. He estimated that removal of Chesterfield from the Fourth Circuit cut his case load by 50 per cent. The circuit judge's duties had more than doubled since 1938.

Frederick T. Gray, bar association president, will present the portrait, which Chesterfield Circuit Judge William Old will accept for the court.

Goyne's Status Is Satisfactory

Arthur Goyne, 68, brother of Chesterfield Supervisor Harold T. Goyne Sr., continued in satisfactory condition today at Medical College Hospital following a traffic mishap.

Goyne, of Route 3, Chester, ran into the side of a passing car when he started to cross St. Rt. 10 Wednesday night to enter a friend's car, Trooper T. B. Skeens said.

Driver of the passing eastbound car was listed as James Burton Dickerson, 23, of Route 15, Richmond.

REMARKS OF FREDERICK T. GRAY AT THE PRESENTATION OF THE PORTRAIT OF JOHN GARLAND JEFFERSON,JR.

May it please the Court:

Often in the course of life it comes to pass that one is selected to perform a privileged task when others far more deserving are available for such selection. So it is today. I have the cherished privilege of presenting to the Court the portrait of the distinguished jurist who preceded Your Honor on the bench of the Circuit Court of Chesterfield County. I make this presentation, Your Honor, on behalf of Chesterfield-Colonial Heights Bar Association. There are at least three other persons to whom it would not have been inappropriate that the honor of making this presentation should have been given: I refer to R. Pinkney Sowers, who was President of the Association when this project was undertaken, Richard L. Jones, who was President when it was completed and Ernest P. Gates who as a member of the Committee made diligent efforts to see to it that we met with success. I thank them and the other members of the Association and, incidentally others who as devoted friends of Judge Jefferson gave their assistance although not members of the Association... they have made possible this memorable occasion.

It is eminently fitting and proper, Your Honor, that the portrait of Judge Jefferson should adorn the walls of this Courtroom along with those of distinguished men who have served this Court in the past. In days to come we may look around us here and be reminded of the words of Lord Coke:

> "For thy comfort and encouragement cast thine eyes upon the sages of the law who have been before thee."

John Garland Jefferson, Jr. was born at his family home in Amelia County, Winterham, on January 17, 1885 the son of John Garland and Harriett Mason Jefferson. He descended from and Uncle of Virginia's most distinguished Jefferson..Thomas.

After completing his public school education in Amelia County Judge Jefferson spent one year in Fredericksburg College and from there transferred his scholastic efforts to Hampden-Sydney from which institution he received his Bachelor of Arts Degree in 1905. It was immediately after receiving his B.A.Degree that Judge Jefferson spent one of his rare periods away from his beloved Amelia County because for a short period of time he taught school in Smithfield, Virginia.

Your Honor, it is often true that great men come into the legal profession because they are financially unable to pursue more costly educational fields. We can be thankful that as Judge Jefferson once said he didn't have money enough to do anything else.' Because had adequate financial resources been available it is quite possible that he would have chosen the engineering profession.

Having chosen the law Judge Jefferson pursued his studies at the University of Virginia which in 1908 awarded to him its Bachelor of Laws Degree, but not before he came a member of Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity and the cherished Raven Society.

He practiced law in Richmond for a few months following his graduation from the University of Virginia but the call of Amelia was still strong upon him and in 1909 he opened his office for the practice of law in that county.

Almost immediately his talent was recognized and he was called upon to exercise them in a variety of fields; as Chairman of the Democratic Party of Amelia County which post he held for a number of years; as Chairman of Amelia County School Board; as President of Union Bank and Trust Co. of Amelia and as President of the Amelia Farm Bureau Federation.

It was almost inevitable that with the birth of the Trial Justice System, John Garland Jefferson, Jr.'s name would be the first considered when in 1934 it became necessary to appoint such and officer for Amelia for the first time. He was appointed by Chesterfield's beloved Edwin P. Cox on April 2 of that year, after having been recommended by the Board of Supervisors of the County.

Judge Jefferson's keen interest in dairying brought an additional honor and burden to him on December 1, 1937 for on that day

Governor Perry appointed him a member and Chairman of the State Milk Commission. The fact that he was supported by both the Virginia State Dairyman's Association and the Virginia Dairy Products Association is 'best evidence" that his reputation had travelled far beyond the boundaries of Amelia.

During this busy period Judge Jefferson was also an elder of the Amelia Presbyterian Church and Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the State Trial Justice Association.

Judge Cox, who first started Judge Jefferson as a jurist, presided with distinction over the Fourth Judicial Circuit, until for the last time he lay his gavel down and journeyed to that higher court beyond. His passing created in the minds of many not a vacancy but a void.

Governor Price was required to fill that void and for the purpose on April 2, 1938 he selected Judge Jefferson with the statement "The Fourth Circuit is fortunate to have such a man to fill this important post."

His appointment was greeted with popular approval. In its Editorial the following day the Richmond Times-Dispatch said:

> "The Circuit has had but three previous judges since it was created; Walter Watson of Nottoway, Robert Southall of Amelia and Edwin P. Cox of Chesterfield. All were regarded as able jurists, and Mr. Jefferson may be expected to live up to that tradition. Farmer, banker, lawyer, cultivated gentleman he has the mental and temperamental equipment which becomes a wise and just judge."

The writer of the editorial was a prophet for the tradition was maintained. "Judge Jefferson," said the Chesterfield-Colonial Heights Bar Association of the occasion of the creation of the separate Circuit for this Court, "Judge Jefferson brought to the bench a Friendly dignity and Patience which will be long remembered."

For eighteen years he served this Court until Your Honor's appointment on February 20, 1956. He was regarded by all as a just judge. There is no greater tribute that can be paid a jurist then to be so regarded by all who come before him.

The company here assembled knows well the wide variety of matters which comes before the Judge of a Circuit Court for decision in Virginia. Judge Jefferson approached all of these cases in the same manner--impartially, patiently, and with the thought only that every person who appeared before the bar of his Court, be he prisoner, prosecutor, advocate, or party litigant should receive courteous and kindly treatment and "Equal Justice under the Law."

A man can render no greater service in our society than to be adequately prepared then courageously serve as Judge. And when the Judge is secure in his knowledge of the law, resolute in his judgment, merciful in his sentence, and patient in his manner; dispensing justice without fear or favor then are we in a democratic society secure in our persons and our property and then may be confidently pass to our posterity the material gains which we have made.

Such a Judge is John Garland Jefferson, Jr. On another day Dr. Douglas Southall Freeman spoke about another judge. His words are so appropriate that I cannot resist borrowing them for Judge Jefferson:

> He knows the law, but never closes his mind to the further study of it. In his office he is a friendly and considerate gentleman, humble and kindly in spirit. On the bench he has dignity without pomposity. Never for a moment, in his clear head, does he appropriate the majesty of the law to any majesty of his own person. Although he has been for years a judge, he has no mental strut and never has let his mind or his outlook be warped by blandishment or flattery."

In the First Chapter of the Book of Deuteronomy Moses admonished the Israelites thusly > ye shall not respect persons in judgment; but ye shall hear the small as well as the great; ye shall not be afraid of the face of man; for the judgment is God's and the cause that is too hard for you, bring it unto me, and I will hear it."

By this charge did Judge Jefferson conduct himself on this bench and by this charge he continues to conduct himself as Judge of the Fourth Circuit.

For these reasons, Your Honor, it is my cherished privilege to present to this Court a portrait of Judge Jefferson on behalf of the Colonial-Heights-Chesterfield Bar Association. I would move the Court that an appropriate place be designated that it might be displayed along with the portraits of other great men who have served Chesterfield County.

The board of viewers recommends that this street be taken into the states secondary system of roads when this street is brought up to county standards by re-laying the pipe across the road so that it will properly drain and by improving the connection at Route 1 by removing the stumps from the ditch line and making the surface width 24' wide.

The road has not been graded 30' ditch to ditch throughbout its entire length and the drainage pipes across the road are in poor condition and are too short. The viewers feel that proper easement should also be obtained for drainage ditches leading from the pipes under the road.
